

UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

Firoozeh Soltan Mohammadi | Rooha Imani | Seyyed-Soroush Abbasi | Syeed-Amin Abbasi | Seyyed-Karam Abbasi | Nasim Kashani Nejad | Homayoun Khanlari | Nima Mahin Bakht | Sanaz Tafazoli | Shahrouz Esmaili | Nemat Pourvali | Mehr-Ali Hemmati | Hamid Gorgin | Ghadir Rahimi | Mohammad Bahrami | Seyed Fereydoun Taheri | Seyed Farhad Zalnouri | Ali Nazari | Noshad Taheri | Seyed Fariborz Shah-Ebrahimi | Farzad Rahmatnabadi | Amin Malekzade | Meraj Hemmati | Bardia Tajdini | Rashid Mohammadi | Hamid Afshari | Masoum Razavi | Naghi Rahmani | Faezeh Ranai | Seyed Foad Shah-Ebrahimi | Navid Hassanlou | Hamid Zandi Nejjhad | Meysam Azimi | Afshin Azimi | Seyed Shahoo Shah-Ebrahimi | Seyed Ali Dakei | Kamyab Heidari | Siavash Kaliani | Kaki Saeed Almasi | Faezeh Abdipour | Parwa Behdad | Elaheh Mohammadi | Pooya Saraf | Leili Karami | Hami Bahadori | Shayan Gholami | Shaghayegh Bahrami | Kamyar Habibi | Badie Khazaei | Siroos Zabih | Armaghan Zabih | Arash Zamani | Saman Khadem | Parisa Roohi Zadeegan | Niloofer Hamed | Aida Rasti | Amin Sharifi | Atash Shahkarami | Enayatollah Naeimi | Sepehr Ziaee | Payam Vali | Malihe Nazari | Joseph Shahbazian | Atollah Zafar | Fariba Ashtari | Zhila Shahriri | Elham Choubdar | Bit

Haghighi | Samiyeh Gholinejad | Negar Darabi | Mohammad Chegini | Mohammad Golbaz | Sara Ahmadi | Homayoun Zhayeh | Mahboubeh Misaghian | Farid Alavi | Neda Shabani | Peyman Manavi | Jamileh Pakrou | Parvan Manavi | Soroush Agahi | Kianoush Salmanzadeh | Payam Shabani | Elham Salmanzadeh | Houman Khoshnami | Farba Kamalabadi | Mahvash Sabet | Afif Naeimi | Saeed Naseri | Hamid Naseri | Afshah Emami | Saman Ostovar | Saha Sabet | Zahra Sedigh-Hamedani | Shafiq Eslami | Nima Shadpour | Nematoollah Shadpour | Mostafa Khosravi | Hasan Nisi | Jome Naami | Abdolshah Azari | Shahram Najafromenari | Shahnaz Sabet | Reza Radmanesh | Mishak Manavipour | Behliah Manavipour | Hanan Hashemi | Haleh

Gholami | Gholamreza Keyvanmanesh | Melika Qaragozlu | Soori Babaei Chegini | Hayedeh Ram | Fardin Naddafian | Zhila Sharafi Nasrabadi | Negar Ighani | Shaghayegh Khaneh-Zarin | Samin Ehsani | Hiwa Yazdan Mehdi Abadi | Mitra Bandi Amirabadi | Amin Zolfaghari | Morteza Mashhood Kari | Ahmad Sarparast | Ayub Pour Rezazadeh | Seyyed Sadrullah Fazeli Zare | Yusef Mehrdad | Sahba Farnoush | Shakila Monfared | Parizad Hamidi Shafagh | Noushin Jafari | Monireh Arabshahi | Saba Kord Afshari | Yasaman Ariani | Zeynab Jalalian | Farid Zirgi Moghaddam | Ataollah Melaki | Roya Melaki | Atieh Salehi | Arezou Mohammadi | Nasim Ghanvatian | Mehrallah Afshar | Arash Rasekhi | Maral Rasti | Mahnaz Jan Nesar | Sakineh Behjati | Hadi Rahimi | Alireza Nourmohammadi | Ameen Khaki | Milad Goudarzi | Abdolreza Ali Haghnejad | Ardeshir Fanaian | Mohammad Nouri | Sina Dehghan | Behnam Eskandarian | Kasra Nouri | Mostafa Abdi | Mohammad Sharifi Moghaddam | Saeed Soltanpour | Milad Davardan | Farhang Sahba | Anoush Rayeneh | Ali Sani | Afshin Bulbulan | Marjan Davari | Zaman Fadaei | Farhad Fahandezh | Abdolrahim Kouhi | Amanollah Balochi | Abbas Dehghan | Adel Naimi | Youcef Nadarkhani | Golrokh Ebrahimi Iraee | Mahsa Amini

A protester seen holding a rosary and a placard with a picture of Mahsa Amini during the demonstration. Protesters organized a demonstration following the death of Mahsa Amini. Mahsa fell into a coma and died after being arrested in Tehran by the morality police for allegedly violating the country's hijab rules. Amini's death has sparked weeks of violent protests across Iran. (Photo by Onur Dogman / SOPA Images/ Sipa USA)(Sipa via AP Images)

ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE U.S. COMMISSION ON INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

COMMISSIONERS

Nury Turkel

Chair

Abraham Cooper

Vice Chair

David Curry

Frederick A. Davie

Sharon Kleinbaum

Mohamed Magid

Stephen Schneck

Eric Ueland

Frank Wolf

Erin D. Singhsinsuk

Executive Director

APRIL 2023

PROFESSIONAL STAFF

Elizabeth K. Cassidy, Director of Research and Policy

Roy Haskins, Director of Operations Management

Danielle Ashbahian, Chief of Public Affairs

Keely Bakken, Supervisory Policy Analyst

Thomas Kraemer, Chief Administrative Officer

Jamie Staley, Supervisory Policy Advisor

Scott Weiner, Supervisory Policy Analyst

Kurt Werthmuller, Supervisory Policy Analyst

Susan Bishai, Policy Analyst

Mollie Blum, Researcher

Mingzhi Chen, Senior Policy Analyst

Patrick Greenwalt, Policy Analyst

Sema Hasan, Policy Analyst

Veronica McCarthy, Public Affairs Associate

Hilary Miller, Researcher

Nora Morton, Operations Specialist

Dylan Schexnaydre, Researcher

Zack Udin, Research Analyst

Madeline Velturo, Senior Policy Analyst

Luke Wilson, Researcher

U.S. COMMISSION ON INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

732 North Capitol Street, NW, Suite A714

Washington, DC 20401

(P) 202-523-3240

www.uscirf.gov

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Introduction and Overview	1
About this Report	1
Standards for CPC, SWL, and EPC Recommendations	2
USCIRF's 2023 CPC, SWL, and EPC Recommendations	2
Implementation of the International Religious Freedom Act	5
Key Findings	5
Recommendations to the Administration	6
Recommendations to Congress	6
Key USCIRF Resources & Activities	6
Legal Framework	7
Key Developments in 2022	7
Countries Recommended for Designation as Countries of Particular Concern (CPCs)	12
Afghanistan	12
Burma	14
China	16
Cuba	20
Eritrea	22
India	24
Iran	26
Nicaragua	28
Nigeria	30
North Korea	32
Pakistan	34
Russia	36
Saudi Arabia	38
Syria	40
Tajikistan	42
Turkmenistan	44
Vietnam	46
Countries Recommended for the State Department's Special Watch List (SWL)	48
Algeria	48
Azerbaijan	50
Central African Republic	52
Egypt	54
Indonesia	56
Iraq	58
Kazakhstan	60
Malaysia	62
Sri Lanka	64
Turkey	66
Uzbekistan	68

Other Key Developments	71
Transnational Repression and Influence by Religious Freedom Violators	71
Religious Freedom Concerns in Europe	71
Laws Restricting Religious Freedom	72
Emerging Religious Freedom Concerns in Other Countries	73
Combating Antisemitism: Positive Developments.	74
Religious Freedom Concerns for Indigenous Peoples in Latin America.	75
Key USCIRF Recommendations Implemented in 2022	77
Designating the Worst Violators.	77
Filling IRF-Related Appointments.	77
Increasing the Use of Targeted Sanctions	77
Designation of Rohingya Genocide	77
Raising IRF Issues in Multilateral Engagement	78
Raising IRF Issues in Bilateral Engagement.	78
Implementation of Executive Order 13926 – Advancing International Religious Freedom	78
Refugee Resettlement	79
Asylum Seekers in Expedited Removal	79
Advocacy for Religious Prisoners of Conscience	79
Enforcement of China-Related Human Rights Legislation	79
Congressional Action Promoting Religious Freedom	79
Appendix 1 Commissioner Biographies	81
Appendix 2 Freedom of Religion or Belief Victims List	83
Appendix 3 Highlights of USCIRF’s Public Activities in 2022	89

INTRODUCTION AND OVERVIEW

In September 2022, Iran’s morality police arrested, beat, and mortally wounded Mahsa Zhina Amini because her visible hair violated the government’s religiously grounded headscarf law. Outraged by this flagrant denial of life, young women and girls led hundreds of thousands of fellow Iranians in peaceful protests asserting their right to freedom of religion or belief, risking severe punishment, permanent injury, and even death. Rather than respect this call to abide by its obligations under international law, the Iranian government ramped up a campaign of violent repression against its own people. Security forces shot children like Kian Pirfalak (age nine), beat and killed girls like Nika Shakarami (age 16), and repeatedly sexually harassed, sexually assaulted, and raped scores of peaceful protesters like Armita Abbasi (age 21). Iran’s government then used intimidation and threats to prevent victims’ families from speaking publicly and truthfully about this repression.

The cover of this year’s U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) annual report honors the Iranian women and girls who have been at the forefront of the ongoing protests for greater freedom in Iran and have faced extreme and violent consequences for their participation. Iranian authorities’ systematic use of sexual and gender-based violence against them represents a purposeful weaponization of religious conceptions of purity, modesty, and gender hierarchy in an effort to shame Iranians out of peacefully asserting their fundamental right to religious freedom.

The cover also honors the many other Iranians, known and unknown, held in prison in 2022 on account of their religious beliefs, activity, or identity by displaying the names of the individuals from Iran who are included in USCIRF’s Freedom of Religion or Belief Victims List. Iranian authorities’ repression of freedom of religion or belief has been a decades-long campaign targeting both religious minorities and members of the majority Shi’a Muslim community. During 2022, in addition to its repression of protesters, Iran’s leadership continued to target members of the Baha’i, Christian, Gonabadi Sufi, Zoroastrian, Yarsani, Sunni Muslim, Shi’a Muslim, and nonreligious communities with harassment, arrests, egregiously long prison sentences, multi-year internal exiles, or bans on participating in political and social activities. Iranian security services also targeted religious minorities who have fled abroad as well as activists in other countries, including on U.S. soil, who opposed mandatory headscarf laws and other religious freedom restrictions. Based on these systematic, egregious, and ongoing violations of religious freedom, in this report USCIRF is again recommending that Iran be designated by the U.S. Department of State as a Country of Particular Concern (CPC). USCIRF urges the administration of President Joseph R. Biden to continue to coordinate international action to lift the veil of impunity under which Iran’s leadership continues to operate.

Beyond Iran, this report sounds the alarm regarding the deterioration of religious freedom conditions in a range of other countries and provides policy recommendations to the U.S. government to respond to violations occurring in these places. This year, these countries include Sri Lanka, which USCIRF is recommending for placement on the State Department’s Special Watch List (SWL) for the first time. USCIRF previously published country updates on Sri Lanka in 2021 and 2022 and found sufficient evidence of severe violations of religious freedom, such as discrimination against religious minorities in the form of targeted arrests using problematic legislation and appropriation of land and property. Similarly, USCIRF is recommending CPC designations for Cuba and Nicaragua for the first time after previously recommending them for placement on the SWL since 2004 and 2019, respectively. In Cuba, religious freedom conditions in 2022 worsened considerably, with the government seeking total dominance over religious life in the country. Additionally, the regime in Nicaragua has sharply increased its persecution of the Catholic Church by imprisoning clergy, shuttering church-affiliated organizations, and prohibiting Catholic rituals.

About This Report

Created by the International Religious Freedom Act of 1998, as amended (IRFA), USCIRF is an independent, bipartisan U.S. government advisory body, separate from the State Department, that monitors and reports on religious freedom abroad and makes policy recommendations to the president, secretary of state, and Congress. USCIRF bases these recommendations on the provisions of its authorizing legislation and the standards in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), and other international documents. USCIRF’s mandate and annual reports are different from, and complementary to, the mandate and annual reports of the State Department’s Office of International Religious Freedom.

USCIRF’s 2023 Annual Report assesses religious freedom violations and progress in 28 countries during calendar year 2022 and makes independent recommendations for U.S. policy. The key findings, recommendations, and analysis in this report are based on a year’s research by USCIRF, including travel, hearings, meetings, and briefings, and are approved by a majority vote of Commissioners. Under the statute, each Commissioner has the option to include a statement with his or her own individual views.

Iranian authorities’ repression of freedom of religion or belief has been a decades-long campaign targeting both religious minorities and members of the majority Shi’a Muslim community.

The report's primary focus is on two groups of countries: first, those that USCIRF recommends the State Department should designate as CPCs under IRFA, and second, those that USCIRF recommends the State Department should place on its SWL. The report also includes USCIRF's recommendations of nonstate actors for designation by the State Department as Entities of Particular Concern (EPCs) under IRFA. In addition, the report analyzes the U.S. government's implementation of IRFA during the reporting year and provides recommendations to bolster overall U.S. efforts to advance freedom of religion or belief abroad. It also includes a section discussing key trends and developments in religious freedom globally during the reporting period, including in countries that are not recommended for CPC or SWL status. This year, that section covers topics including transnational repression and influence by religious freedom violators, religious freedom concerns in Europe, laws restricting religious freedom, emerging religious freedom concerns in other countries, positive developments in combating antisemitism, and religious freedom concerns for indigenous peoples in Latin America. Finally, the report's last section highlights key USCIRF recommendations that the U.S. government has implemented since USCIRF's previous annual report.

In this report, USCIRF uses the terms "religious freedom," "freedom of religion," and "freedom of religion or belief" interchangeably to refer to the broad right to freedom of thought, conscience, and religion or belief—including the right to nonbelief—protected under international human rights law.

Standards for CPC, SWL, and EPC Recommendations

IRFA defines CPCs as countries where the government engages in or tolerates "particularly severe" violations of religious freedom. It defines the State Department's SWL for countries where the government engages in or tolerates "severe" violations of religious freedom.

Under IRFA, particularly severe violations of religious freedom mean "systematic, ongoing, [and] egregious violations . . . , including violations such as—(A) torture or cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment; (B) prolonged detention without charges; (C) causing the disappearance of persons by the abduction or clandestine detention of those persons; or (D) other flagrant denial of the right to life, liberty, or the security of persons." Although the statute does not specifically define severe violations of religious freedom, in making SWL recommendations USCIRF interprets it to mean violations that meet two of the elements of IRFA's systematic, ongoing, and egregious standard (i.e., that the violations are systematic and ongoing, systematic and egregious, or ongoing and egregious).

To meet the legal standard for designation as an EPC, a nonstate group must engage in particularly severe violations of religious freedom, as defined above, and must also be "a nonsovereign entity that exercises significant political power and territorial control; is outside the control of a sovereign government; and often employs violence in pursuit of its objectives."

The Annual Report highlights the countries and entities that, in USCIRF's view, merit CPC, SWL, or EPC designation; it is intended to focus U.S. policymakers' attention on the worst violators of religious freedom globally. The fact that a country or nonstate group is not covered in this report does not mean it did not violate religious freedom during the reporting year. It only means that based on the information available to USCIRF, the conditions during that year did not, in USCIRF's view, meet the high threshold—the perpetration or toleration of particularly severe or severe violations of religious freedom—required to recommend the country or nonstate group for CPC, SWL, or EPC designation. In the case of a nonstate group, it also could mean that the group did not meet other statutory requirements, such as exercising significant political power and territorial control.

USCIRF monitors and has concerns about religious freedom conditions abroad, including violations of freedom of religion or belief perpetrated or tolerated by governments and entities not covered in this report. The full range of USCIRF's work on a wide variety of countries and topics can be found at www.uscirf.gov.

USCIRF'S 2023 CPC, SWL, and EPC Recommendations

For 2023, based on religious freedom conditions in 2022, USCIRF recommends that the State Department:

- Redesignate as CPCs the following 12 countries: Burma, China, Cuba, Eritrea, Iran, Nicaragua, North Korea, Pakistan, Russia, Saudi Arabia, Tajikistan, and Turkmenistan;
- Designate as additional CPCs the following five countries: Afghanistan, India, Nigeria, Syria, and Vietnam;
- Maintain on the SWL the following two countries: Algeria and the Central African Republic (CAR);
- Include on the SWL the following nine countries: Azerbaijan, Egypt, Indonesia, Iraq, Kazakhstan, Malaysia, Sri Lanka, Turkey, and Uzbekistan; and
- Redesignate as EPCs the following seven nonstate actors: al-Shabaab, Boko Haram, Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (HTS), the Houthis, Islamic State in the Greater Sahara (ISGS), Islamic State in West Africa Province (ISWAP also referred to as ISIS-West Africa), and Jamaat Nasr al-Islam wal Muslimin (JNIM).

The conditions supporting the CPC or SWL recommendation for each country are described in the relevant country chapters of this report. The conditions supporting the EPC recommendations for Boko Haram and ISWAP are described in the Nigeria chapter and for HTS in the Syria chapter.

For al-Shabaab, the Houthis, ISGS, and JNIM, the EPC recommendations are based on the following conditions:

The Annual Report highlights the countries and entities that, in USCIRF's view, merit CPC, SWL, or EPC designation; it is intended to focus U.S. policymakers' attention on the worst violators of religious freedom globally.

Militant Islamist insurgency al-Shabaab continued to operate in parts of Somalia despite military pressure from the Somali government and its allies. The group continued to conduct attacks based on religion in its efforts to establish a state that will enforce a singular interpretation of Islamic law. In addition to targeting military and civilian infrastructure, al-Shabaab also targeted houses of worship. In July, al-Shabaab fighters bombed a mosque in Baidoa during Friday prayers, killing several worshipers.

In 2022, the Houthi movement, formally known as Ansar Allah, did not significantly expand its territorial holdings throughout Yemen after making marginal gains in the year prior. A truce that began in April expired in October despite calls for its renewal; however, even during the brief cessation of hostilities, the Houthis continued their egregious religious freedom violations. The group continued to undermine the rights of women and girls by imposing a mahram (male escort) requirement, even as broader male guardianship restrictions increased considerably. Jewish prisoner Libi Marhabi remained in Houthi detention despite multiple appeals for his release, and the tiny remaining Jewish community faced ongoing repression from Houthi leaders. Authorities persisted in systematically persecuting the Baha'i community by detaining and torturing members while plundering Baha'i land, property, and assets. The Houthis harassed, detained, and tortured Yemeni Christians, particularly converts from Islam, and the group also detained more than 200 Christian foreign workers from Africa on false accusations. Only a few thousand Christians remained in the country, as many fled such persecution.

Militant Islamist insurgencies ISGS and JNIM expanded their reach in the Sahel, including in Mali, Burkina Faso, and Niger. Both ISGS and JNIM engaged in intimidation and conducted attacks based on religion and enforced harsh interpretations of Islamic law in their areas of control. Abuses continued into early 2023 when militant Islamist fighters attacked an Ahmadiyya mosque in Burkina Faso, demanding the attendees change their faith before killing the imam and several others.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM ACT

Key Findings

In 2022, the administration of President Joseph R. Biden continued to prioritize protecting international religious freedom (IRF) and increasing accountability for violations. In March, the U.S. Department of State determined that the “Burmese military committed genocide and crimes against humanity against Rohingya” and imposed further sanctions against Burmese individuals and entities responsible for the regime’s ongoing violent crackdown. In April, President Biden signed into law the permanent reauthorization of the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act (Global Magnitsky Act). USCIRF welcomed the permanent reauthorization, which provides the U.S. government with the authority to impose sanctions (i.e., issue visa bans and asset freezes) against foreign persons engaging in gross human rights abuses, such as severe religious freedom violations.

The U.S. government continued to serve as the Secretariat of the International Religious Freedom or Belief Alliance (IRFBA). During 2022, IRFBA made multicountry statements on egregious religious freedom violations in Nicaragua and Nigeria, the rights of religious minority groups such as the Baha’i and Ahmadiyya Muslim communities to freely practice their faiths, and the incompatibility of blasphemy laws with freedom of religion or belief and freedom of expression. In addition, the U.S. government cosponsored a United Nations Human Rights Council (UNHRC) resolution on freedom of religion or belief and supported convening a special session of the UNHRC to address Iran’s suppression of protesters.

In September, President Biden maintained the heightened admissions cap for refugees at 125,000 for fiscal year (FY) 2023 and designated certain populations for priority consideration as refugees, including multiple groups fleeing religious persecution. This followed a commitment from the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) to increase staffing levels to more efficiently process refugee claims. Additionally, USCIS provided temporary protected status to Afghan nationals living in the United States.

In November, the State Department designated 12 countries as “countries of particular concern” (CPCs) under the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA) for engaging in or tolerating particularly severe violations of religious freedom, including for the first time Cuba and Nicaragua. USCIRF welcomed the new CPC designations but expressed tremendous disappointment that the State Department failed to include India and Nigeria among its list of CPCs. While the State Department reimposed existing sanctions on eight of the 12 countries it designated as CPCs, it issued waivers on taking any action against the remaining four. USCIRF has long called on administrations to refrain from issuing waivers and relying exclusively on existing sanctions to hold CPCs accountable. The State Department placed four countries on its “Special Watch List” (SWL) for severe religious freedom violations, including two countries for the first time, the Central African Republic (CAR) and Vietnam. Although the State Department designated Vietnam as a CPC in 2004 and 2005, it never previously placed Vietnam on the SWL. Finally, the State Department designated nine “entities of particular concern” (EPCs), which are nonstate actors that engage in particularly severe violations of religious freedom. The Wagner Group, a private Russian military firm, received an EPC designation for the first time in light of its actions in CAR.

In November, the State Department designated 12 countries as “countries of particular concern” (CPCs) under the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA) for engaging in or tolerating particularly severe violations of religious freedom, including for the first time Cuba and Nicaragua.

STATE DEPARTMENT 2022 DESIGNATIONS

CPC Designations	Burma, China, Cuba, Eritrea, Iran, Nicaragua, North Korea, Pakistan, Russia, Saudi Arabia, Tajikistan, and Turkmenistan
SWL Countries	Algeria, Central African Republic, Comoros, and Vietnam
EPC Designations	Al-Shabaab, Boko Haram, Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham (HTS), the Houthis, the Islamic State in Greater Sahara, the Islamic State in West Africa Province, Jamaat Nasr al-Islam wal Muslimin, the Taliban, and the Wagner Group

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE ADMINISTRATION

- Promptly appoint a well-qualified individual within the National Security Council (NSC) as Special Adviser to the President on IRF and provide financial resources and staff needed to fulfill the mandate outlined in IRFA;
- Strengthen advocacy on behalf of individuals persecuted on the basis of religion by maintaining the United States' leadership roles in IRFBA and the International Contact Group on Freedom of Religion or Belief, participating in and supporting future events to advance international religious freedom, and continuing to implement the executive order on Advancing International Religious Freedom;
- Increase the use of the Global Magnitsky Act and other human rights related financial and visa authorities to impose asset freezes and/or visa bans on individuals and entities for severe religious freedom violations, citing specific abuses, and coordinate with other countries with similar sanctions regimes on such targeted sanctions whenever possible;
- Fully implement the Elie Wiesel Genocide and Atrocities Prevention Act of 2018 to develop policies to enhance the capacity of the United States to prevent and respond to atrocities worldwide, including those against religious communities;
- Review U.S. policy toward the four CPC-designated countries for which waivers were issued on taking any action—Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Tajikistan, and Turkmenistan—to make policy changes for meaningful consequences and encourage positive change;
- Continue to strengthen the mechanisms of the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) to increase the ability to meet the admissions ceiling for refugees in FY 2023, and prioritize for resettlement survivors of the most egregious forms of religious persecution, including Iranian religious minorities eligible for processing under the Lautenberg Amendment, members of other severely persecuted religious or belief communities, and survivors of genocide or other atrocity crimes;
- Address longstanding flaws in the treatment of asylum seekers in Expedited Removal, including by enhancing the quality and oversight of the initial processing of noncitizens, improving detention conditions, and appointing a high-level official at the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) to coordinate and oversee reforms;
- Allocate greater funding to programs that support civil society and human rights defenders in exile who document and monitor religious freedom violations in countries where civil society is repressed; and
- Perform an assessment on foreign governments' transnational repression as it relates to religious freedom, including analysis of how to improve U.S. government policy and U.S. collaboration with allies to prevent and counter transnational targeting of religious communities.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO CONGRESS

- Examine U.S. policy related to IRF issues, including the effectiveness of CPC designations for mitigating religious freedom violations, through legislation, hearings, briefings, and other actions; and assess, during congressional delegation trips abroad, conditions for persons of all faiths and beliefs as well as nonbelievers;
- Advocate, as individual members of Congress, for IRF by sponsoring religious prisoners of conscience through the Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission's (TLHRC) Defending Freedoms Project, collaborating with the International Panel of Parliamentarians for Freedom of Religion or Belief, and joining the U.S. House of Representatives or U.S. Senate Bipartisan Task Force for Combating Antisemitism and caucuses such as the House IRF Caucus and Ahmadiyya Muslim Caucus;
- Reintroduce and pass the bipartisan Stop Helping Adversaries Manipulate Everything \(SHAME\) Act to prohibit any person from receiving compensation for lobbying on behalf of foreign adversaries, including those engaging in particularly severe violations of the right to freedom of religion or belief; and
- Permanently reauthorize the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom to ensure Congress and the public continue to receive independent, bipartisan monitoring and analysis of international religious freedom issues.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Factsheet: Overview of Refugees Fleeing Religious Persecution Globally
- Factsheet: Freedom of Religion or Belief Victims List
- Issue Brief: Implications of Laws Promoting State-Favored Religions
- Hearing: Women's Roles in Advancing International Religious Freedom
- Podcast: Breaking Down the State Department's IRF Designations

Legal Framework

IRFA, as amended by the Frank R. Wolf International Religious Freedom Act of 2016, seeks to make religious freedom a higher priority in U.S. foreign policy through a range of mechanisms and tools. These include governmental institutions (USCIRF as an independent legislative branch agency requiring regular reauthorization, the ambassador at large and the State Department's IRF Office, and a special adviser on the White House NSC staff); ongoing monitoring and annual reports on international religious freedom violations; and the imposition of consequences for the worst violators. The consequences set forth in IRFA consist of CPC designations and related actions, placement on the State Department's SWL, the ability to bar entry to the United States of foreign officials responsible for particularly severe religious freedom violations, and EPC designations for nonstate actors.

IRFA includes religious freedom as an element of U.S. foreign assistance, cultural exchange, and international broadcasting programs and requires training on religious freedom and religious persecution for State Department foreign service officers and U.S. immigration officials. Further, it includes provisions on U.S. refugee and asylum policy. It also specifically cites U.S. participation in multilateral organizations as an avenue for advancing religious freedom abroad. IRFA is centered on the right to freedom of religion or belief as recognized in international law, as articulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and other international instruments and regional agreements.

For a more detailed description of IRFA, its legislative history, and its implementation, see USCIRF's Factsheet: IRFA.

Alongside IRFA, other laws provide tools to sanction individual religious freedom abusers. Some apply to specific countries, such as the Comprehensive Iran Sanctions and Divestment Act (CISADA, P.L.111-195). More broadly, the 2016 Global Magnitsky Act allows the president, who has delegated these authorities to the secretaries of treasury and state, to deny U.S. visas to and freeze the U.S.-based assets of any foreigner responsible for "extrajudicial killings, torture, or other gross violations of internationally protected human rights" against someone seeking to expose illegal government activity or to exercise or defend internationally protected rights. Executive Order (E.O.) 13818, issued in December 2017 to implement and build on the Global Magnitsky Act, authorizes visa bans and asset freezes against foreign persons involved in "serious human rights abuse," providing an even more expansive basis for targeted sanctions.

In addition, Section 7031(c) of the State Department's FY 2023 annual appropriations (P.L. 117-328) requires the secretary of state to make foreign officials and their immediate family members ineligible for U.S. entry if there is credible evidence that such individuals have been involved in "a gross violation of human rights." Unlike the visa ineligibility provision enacted in IRFA, visa bans under this provision may be announced publicly.

Key Developments in 2022

Key U.S. Government IRF Positions

Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom Rashad Hussain continued implementing his mandate through public speeches and meetings, including with the nongovernmental organization (NGO) IRF Roundtable and other stakeholders. In addition, Ambassador Hussain traveled to Mauritania, Bangladesh, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom, Turkey, and the United Arab Emirates as well as Morocco, the Gambia, and Senegal to meet with government officials and faith communities to advance religious freedom.

In March, the Senate confirmed Deborah E. Lipstadt as Special Envoy to Monitor and Combat Antisemitism and elevated the rank to an ambassador position for the first time. Since assuming her mandate, Ambassador Lipstadt has condemned antisemitic remarks delivered by a UN official; met with NGOs and other stakeholders; and traveled to Argentina and Chile, the United Kingdom, Belgium, France, and South Africa and Morocco to meet with government officials and faith leaders to combat antisemitism, anti-Muslim hatred, racism, and other forms of intolerance and discrimination.

In 2022, Under Secretary for Civilian Security, Democracy, and Human Rights Uzra Zeya, who also serves concurrently as the U.S. Special Coordinator for Tibetan Issues, highlighted ongoing human rights violations in Xinjiang, China, and delivered remarks on protecting Tibetans' right to freedom of religion or belief at an event on the sidelines of the 51st session of the UNHRC.

Lack of Designations for Afghanistan, India, Nigeria, and Syria

The State Department did not designate Afghanistan, India, Nigeria, or Syria as CPCs in 2022 despite USCIRF's recommendations to do so and its own reporting documenting the nature and extent of the religious freedom violations in those countries. USCIRF has recommended CPC status for Afghanistan since 2022, India since 2020, Nigeria since 2009, and Syria since 2014, and it issued a public statement criticizing the State Department's omissions. Information on the religious freedom violations that took place in Afghanistan, India, Nigeria, and Syria in 2022 can be found in the country chapters in this report.

New Designations for Cuba, Nicaragua, CAR, and Vietnam

The State Department elevated Cuba and Nicaragua to CPC status based on worsening religious freedom conditions in those countries and placed CAR and Vietnam on the SWL for the first time, though Vietnam was designated as a CPC in 2004 and 2005. USCIRF continues to conclude and recommend that Vietnam should be designated as a CPC, but it hopes the SWL designation will encourage the

The State Department did not designate Afghanistan, India, Nigeria, or Syria as CPCs in 2022 despite USCIRF's recommendations to do so and its own reporting documenting the nature and extent of the religious freedom violations in those countries.

Vietnamese government to take concrete steps to address long-standing religious freedom concerns.

Malign Foreign Influence

In 2022, a bipartisan group of members of Congress introduced the SHAME Act to prohibit lobbyists from receiving compensation from countries designated as foreign adversaries by the U.S. Department of Commerce. Most of the designated countries engage in particularly severe religious freedom violations and other egregious human rights abuses. The SHAME Act would considerably strengthen the existing regulatory framework around lobbying on behalf of foreign governments. The current regulatory framework, governed by the Foreign Agent Registration Act of 1938 and the Lobbying Disclosure Act, does not prevent lobbyists from working on behalf of foreign adversaries engaging in gross violations of human rights. As such, foreign adversaries can legally attempt to promote their interests or influence U.S. government policy on human rights and international religious freedom issues.

Multilateral Engagement

In 2022, the United States served the first year of a three-year term as a member of the UNHRC after having been elected to the body in October 2021. The U.S. government cosponsored a resolution on Freedom of Religion or Belief and also supported calling an Urgent Debate on human rights violations occurring in Afghanistan against women and girls. During the Urgent Debate, the U.S. government highlighted the longstanding human rights violations perpetrated against the Shi'a Muslim community in Afghanistan and cosponsored a resolution strongly condemning all violations occurring in Afghanistan. In addition, in December, the State Department released multicountry joint statements condemning the Taliban's decisions to ban women from attending universities and working for NGOs.

Following Iran's violent crackdown on Iranians protesting Mahsa Zhina Amini's death at the hands of Iran's Morality Police for wearing an "improper hijab," the U.S. government supported convening a special session of the UNHRC on Iran's human rights violations. At the special session's conclusion, the U.S. government voted in favor of establishing a fact-finding mission to thoroughly and independently investigate human rights violations related to the protests.

During 2022, the U.S. government also organized an event on the protection of ethnic and religious minority groups in Afghanistan and an event on protecting the right to freedom of religion or belief for Tibetan Buddhists; joined a 47-country joint statement on human rights conditions in Xinjiang, Hong Kong, and Tibet; and cosponsored and supported a resolution that removed Iran from the UN Commission on the Status of Women.

Individual Violators

During 2022, there were no known visa denials to any foreign officials for particularly severe religious freedom violations under Section 212(a)(2)(G) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the provision added by IRFA. However, the U.S. government continued its use of newer accountability tools to deny U.S. visas to or block the U.S.-based assets of foreigners for corruption or human rights abuses.

As of December, the U.S. government had sanctioned 606 foreign individuals and entities under the Global Magnitsky Act and the related 2017 E.O. 13818, including multiple sanctions for religious freedom violations. The U.S. Department of the Treasury imposed Global Magnitsky Act sanctions on Chinese public security officials responsible for human rights and religious freedom violations in the Tibetan Autonomous Region and on Iranian law enforcement authorities for violently cracking down on protesters.

The U.S. government also used non-Global Magnitsky Act tools to hold violators accountable. Following the State Department designating the Burmese military's atrocities against the Rohingya as genocide, the Treasury Department, under E.O. 14014, sanctioned Burmese military commanders, a Burmese military unit, and arms dealers responsible for or complicit in serious human rights abuses. In addition, the Treasury Department sanctioned Iranian officials in September, twice in October, in November, and in December under E.O. 13553 for their brutal crackdown against Iranian protesters.

Programs

IRFA envisaged the funding of religious freedom programs authorizing U.S. foreign assistance to promote and develop "legal protections and cultural respect for religious freedom." For FY 2022, the State Department was required to make funds available for international religious freedom programs. During 2022, the State Department's Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor issued several requests for proposals to advance religious freedom and/or provide protection to religious minority groups—including in Bulgaria and Romania, Cuba, and Ethiopia.

Throughout 2022, the Biden administration funded humanitarian aid for religious groups targeted for persecution or genocide and programs to promote religious freedom, tolerance, and pluralism.

In March, the State Department and the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) announced more than $152 million in humanitarian assistance for the Rohingya humanitarian crisis. In May, USAID announced $808 million in humanitarian assistance for the Syria crisis, including funding to support safe spaces and psychosocial support for women and girls. In September, the State Department and USAID announced

$170 million in additional humanitarian assistance for the Rohingya humanitarian crisis and \$326.7 million in humanitarian assistance to vulnerable populations in Afghanistan. Critically, throughout 2022, USAID maintained the Strategic Religious Freedom and International Religious Freedom Sector Council to advise and coordinate action on policy steps to advance USAID’s commitment to freedom of religion or belief.

As of December, the U.S. government had sanctioned 606 foreign individuals and entities under the Global Magnitsky Act and the related 2017 E.O. 13818, including multiple sanctions for religious freedom violations.

Refugee Resettlement

Under USRAP, the president sets a ceiling for how many refugees the United States will accept from abroad each year; under IRFA, religious persecution should be considered in this determination.

In October 2021, the Biden administration increased the annual refugee ceiling to 125,000 for FY 2022, which doubled FY 2021’s 62,500-refugee ceiling. For FY 2022, the Biden administration designated certain populations for priority consideration as refugees—including Turkic Muslim refugees who are nationals or last habitual residents of China, Rohingya Muslim refugees who are nationals or last habitual residents of Burma, and Iraqi and Syrian nationals who are members of religious or ethnic minority groups. In addition, in March 2022, President Biden signed the renewal of the Lautenberg Amendment—a special program allowing certain persecuted religious minority groups to resettle in the United States. Despite these steps, only 25,465 refugees were admitted to the United States in FY 2022. USCIS has prioritized increasing staffing levels to process refugee claims more efficiently.

In September, the White House announced that it was maintaining the admission ceiling at 125,000 for FY 2023. The Biden administration also pledged to continue implementing E.O. 14013 in FY 2023 to rebuild and enhance USRAP and to prioritize persecuted religious populations for U.S. resettlement. In December, the State Department announced an initiative to resettle vulnerable Rohingya refugees as a part of USRAP.

Asylum Seekers in Expedited Removal

As authorized by IRFA, USCIRF examined the U.S. government’s treatment of asylum seekers in Expedited Removal, the process that allows DHS officers to quickly deport—without immigration court hearings—noncitizens who arrive at U.S. ports of entry or cross the border without proper documents unless they can establish a credible fear of persecution or torture. USCIRF has long monitored the subject, including in comprehensive reports released in 2005, 2007, 2013, and 2016 that document major problems successive administrations have not addressed. Specifically, USCIRF found that DHS officials often fail to follow required procedures to identify asylum seekers and refer them for credible fear determinations; that they detain asylum seekers in inappropriate, prison-like conditions; and that funding disparities and a lack of high-level oversight hamper the complicated, multiagency process. These flaws raise serious concerns that the United States is erroneously returning asylum seekers to countries where they could face persecution or torture in violation of both U.S. and international law—a risk that Expedited Removal has only exacerbated.

In 2021, President Biden ordered the secretary of homeland security to review expedited removal procedures and make recommendations for “creating a more efficient and orderly process that facilitates timely adjudications and adherence to standards of fairness and due process,” a step that USCIRF welcomed. Although the recommendations have not been made public, in March 2022, DHS rescinded a notice that expanded Expedited Removal procedures to the maximum extent permitted. With its rescission, the risk of erroneously returning asylum seekers to countries where they could face persecution, while still real, is reduced.

Notable Congressional Efforts to Promote Religious Freedom Abroad

In 2022, Congress continued its own IRF promotion efforts. In April, Congress passed the permanent reauthorization of the Global Magnitsky Act, which USCIRF applauded. Additionally, the House Foreign Affairs Committee held a hearing on the crisis in Burma one year after the coup. The TLHRC held a hearing on discrimination and persecution against Muslims around the world and a hearing on the perilous state of religious freedom in Nicaragua. The Congressional-Executive Commission on China held hearings on China’s control of religion through digital authoritarianism, growing constraints on language and ethnic identity in China, and human rights abuses in Tibet, including religious rights violations.

In addition, members of Congress advocated for the release of prisoners of conscience, including religious prisoners, through the TLHRC’s Defending Freedoms Project. Members sent the executive branch letters on religious freedom violations in Burma, China, India, Iran, Nicaragua, Nigeria, and Vietnam as well as letters advocating for a USRAP Priority 2 designation for religious minorities in Afghanistan and improvements in education for Rohingya refugees in Cox’s Bazar. Members also participated in numerous USCIRF events and hearings, including the launch of the 2022 annual report, a hearing on U.S. policy and freedom of religion or belief in North Korea, a hearing on the crackdown on religious freedom in Nicaragua, and a hearing on China’s religious freedom violations.

2023 USCIRF RECOMMENDATIONS

■ COUNTRIES OF PARTICULAR CONCERN

- | | | | |
|-------------|-------------|--------------|--------------|
| Afghanistan | India | Pakistan | Turkmenistan |
| Burma | Iran | Russia | Vietnam |
| China | Nicaragua | Saudi Arabia | |
| Cuba | Nigeria | Syria | |
| Eritrea | North Korea | Tajikistan | |

■ SPECIAL WATCH LIST COUNTRIES

- | | | | |
|--------------------------|-----------|------------|------------|
| Algeria | Egypt | Kazakhstan | Turkey |
| Azerbaijan | Indonesia | Malaysia | Uzbekistan |
| Central African Republic | Iraq | Sri Lanka | |

AFGHANISTAN

USCIRF-RECOMMENDED FOR COUNTRIES OF PARTICULAR CONCERN (CPC)

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Afghanistan continued to deteriorate, as they have since the Taliban seized control of the country in August 2021. In contrast to its pledges for change and inclusivity upon its seizure of power, the Taliban has since ruled Afghanistan in a deeply repressive and intolerant manner—essentially unchanged from its previous era in power from 1996 to 2001. Its rigorous enforcement on all Afghans of its harsh interpretation of Shari'a violates the freedom of religion or belief of religious minorities; women; members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and intersex (LGBTQI+) community; and Afghans with differing interpretations of Islam, such as predominantly Shi'a Muslim members of the ethnic Hazara community. Taliban leaders have further issued a series of decrees specifying acceptable behaviors under their interpretation of Islam, particularly targeting women by restricting their freedom of movement, dress, education, participation in sports, right to work, and healthcare. The group's Ministry for Propagation of Virtue and Prevention of Vice (MPVPV) enforces what its officials deem religiously appropriate conduct through a notoriously violent and hardline Islamist policing system that has been especially harsh and progressively worsening toward Afghan women.

Despite continued promises to protect all ethnic and religious communities residing in Afghanistan, the Taliban's de facto government has been unable or unwilling to provide religious and ethnic minorities safety and security against radical Islamist violence, particularly in the form of attacks by the Islamic State-Khorasan Province (ISIS-K) and factions of the Taliban itself. In April, for example, ISIS-K bombed several religious sites, including Sahib Khalifa Mosque, a Sufi house of worship in Kabul, killing almost 50 worshipers, and Mawlawi Sekandar Sufi Mosque in Kunduz Province, killing 33 people. Much of the related violence has targeted Hazara villages, schools, and places of worship, such as a series of attacks in April against the Seh Dokan Mosque in Mazar-i-Sharif and twin bombings at Abdul Rahim Shahid High School in the Shi'a-dominated area of Kabul. That same month, the Taliban tortured and killed a Hazara midwife in Mazar-e-Sharif, amputating her legs, stabbing her, and shooting her 12 times. In August, an attack on a Shi'a Muslim neighborhood in Kabul during the holy days of Muharram left eight people dead. These existential threats led several members of Parliament in the United Kingdom, along with a group of key scholars and advocates, to warn in their unofficial inquiry in August of an imminent threat of genocide facing the Hazara community.

The Taliban also either actively targets, discriminates against, or outright denies the existence of many vulnerable religious minorities such as Christians—who the Taliban falsely insist do not exist in the country—as well as Ahmadiyya Muslims, Baha'is, and nonbelievers. Members of these groups are unable to express their faiths or beliefs openly because they face dire consequences, including death, if discovered by the Taliban or ISIS-K. The Taliban reportedly assured the Sikh and Hindu communities of their safety shortly following the group's takeover of Afghanistan in 2021; however, several subsequent incidents of vandalism and violence led many to flee the country in 2021 and 2022, leaving behind fewer than 100 Hindus and Sikhs.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Designate Afghanistan under the de facto rule of the Taliban as a "country of particular concern," or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Expand the existing Priority 2 \(P-2\) designation granting U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (USRAP) access for certain Afghan nationals and their family members to explicitly include Afghan religious minorities at extreme risk of religious persecution;
 - Integrate protections for freedom of religion or belief into all potential dialogue with the Taliban; continue to clearly and publicly condemn ongoing and severe atrocities committed by the Taliban and ISIS-K; and emphasize to Taliban leadership the close relationship between religious freedom and overall security; and
 - Impose targeted sanctions on Taliban officials responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals' assets and/or banning their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities—citing specific religious freedom violations—and coordinate with allies to impose similar sanctions.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Create by law a P-2 designation for members of religious groups at extreme risk of persecution by the Taliban.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom in Afghanistan
- Hearing: Religious Freedom in Afghanistan: One Year since the Taliban Takeover
- Podcast: Deteriorating Religious Freedom Conditions in South Asia
- Factsheet: Overview of Refugees Fleeing Religious Persecution Globally

Background

Afghanistan is home to a diverse array of ethnic groups, including Pashtuns, Tajiks, Hazaras, Uzbeks, Turkmen, and Balochs. Historically, the nation was religiously diverse, but the vast majority of non-Muslims fled after the Taliban seized control in 1996, and many of those who remained subsequently fled the country following the U.S. withdrawal in August 2021. The country's current population of over 38 million is approximately 99.7 percent Muslim (84.7–89.7 percent Sunni and 10–15 percent Shi'a, including Ismailis and Ahmadis), with the few remaining non-Muslims (Hindus, Sikhs, Baha'is, Christians, Buddhists, Zoroastrians, and others) comprising the remaining 0.3 percent. Statistics for smaller groups are difficult to substantiate as most members are now reportedly in hiding; however, estimates for the Ahmadiyya Muslim community range from 450 to 2,500, and as many as 10,000 to 12,000 Christians likely lived in Afghanistan at the beginning of the year. The country's reported last remaining Jew, Zebulon Simentov, left in 2021.

Policing Society and Restricting Women

The Taliban has placed many other restrictions on Afghan society based on the regime's interpretation of religious law, such as the banning of music. In January 2022, a video emerged from Paktia Province in which Taliban members humiliated two local musicians and burned their instruments. As a result of such incidents—including several executions and attacks since August 2021—many artists, entertainers, and musicians have fled Afghanistan, while those remaining hide their trade in fear; the Artistic Freedom Initiative reports that around 3,000 performers have requested help to leave.

However, the Taliban has focused its most disastrous, sweeping, and repressive policies against the country's women in an effort to implement its vision of religious law that excludes Afghan women from all opportunities and aspects of public life. In May, the MPVPV issued a decree stating that women in Afghanistan must cover their faces in public, ideally wearing a burqa, and warned women not to wear colorful clothing, high-heeled shoes, perfume, or anything ostensibly meant to attract the opposite sex. Secondary schools for girls remained closed throughout 2022, contingent on plans for the Taliban to set Islamic and cultural conditions for female students aged 12 and older, according to statements from the group. Furthermore, the de facto government announced in December a complete ban on women attending universities, prompting a series of protests across the country by male and female students as well as widespread international condemnation, including from the United Nations \(UN\) Security Council, the Organization of Islamic Cooperation, and many Muslim-majority countries. Days later, the Taliban demonstrated its recalcitrance by announcing yet another ban—this time on women's employment with local and international nongovernmental organizations (NGOs)—leading to similar international outrage and the suspension of activities by a number of organizations. The UN joined in temporarily closing some of its aid programs in Afghanistan, warning of “life-threatening consequences” from the Taliban's actions.

Key U.S. Policy

While the United States has not recognized the Taliban regime as the official government of Afghanistan, a U.S. government delegation met with Taliban representatives in Qatar in June, underscoring U.S. commitment to the Afghan people in the wake of the deadly earthquakes that hit eastern Afghanistan earlier that month. U.S. officials emphasized the importance of the Taliban fulfilling its public commitments, including protecting the rights of all Afghans. The officials also expressed concern regarding the ongoing presence of al-Qaeda, ISIS-K, and other terrorist organizations in Afghanistan that continue to target religious minorities and those with differing beliefs. In August, U.S. drone strikes killed al-Qaeda leader Ayman al-Zawahiri in Kabul, and the U.S. Department of State accused the Taliban of grossly violating the 2020 Doha Declaration.

Refugee resettlement remains one of the most crucial but challenging U.S. policy issues regarding Afghanistan. At present, only Afghan nationals who meet a highly limited set of conditions, such as working directly for U.S. authorities or U.S.-funded programs or for NGOs or media outlets based in the United States, have priority status for resettlement. Efforts to extend the program to other communities and individuals at particular risk since the Taliban's return to power have largely stalled. As of the end of 2022, and despite recognition from Secretary of State Antony J. Blinken and some members of Congress regarding the horrendous conditions that religious minorities and other especially vulnerable populations face in Afghanistan, no specific legislation or policy initiative has yet emerged that would extend the crucial P-2 designation to those communities. Many such vulnerable families are reportedly among the thousands of displaced Afghans who by the end of 2022 still remained in limbo at the Emirates Humanitarian Centre in Abu Dhabi, awaiting U.S. processing in cooperation with United Arab Emirates authorities.

On November 30, the State Department redesignated the Taliban as an “entity of particular concern,” or EPC, under IRFA for engaging in particularly severe violations of religious freedom. However, the State Department did not designate Afghanistan as a CPC, likely due to its nonrecognition of the Taliban as the de facto governing authority; it also did not designate ISIS-K as an EPC due to the group's lack of territorial control—its horrific campaign of violence against Afghan religious minorities notwithstanding.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Burma continued to decline significantly. Since staging a military coup in February 2021, the country’s junta—the Tatmadaw—has ruled through the State Administration Council (SAC) under the leadership of General Min Aung Hlaing. The SAC maintains full control of only an estimated 17 percent of the country’s total territory, and in that limited space it has significantly cracked down on all dissent and freedoms.

Throughout the year, the SAC continued to link its legitimacy to the sponsorship of Burma’s Buddhist majority. In August, Major General Zaw Min Tun promised that any verbal, written, or online post insulting Buddhism would be punished according to the law. In July, General Hlaing joined two Buddhist monks in consecrating a replica of Shwezigon Pagoda in Moscow, Russia. In March, it was reported that since the time of the coup, the junta had destroyed, raided, and looted at least 30 Buddhist monasteries in Sagaing Region and 20 more in Magwe Region. The SAC’s sponsorship is limited to those Buddhist communities that support the junta.

The government violently targeted houses of worship belonging to religious minorities throughout the year, with evidence suggesting the SAC is using the same tactics against these communities that its forces have deployed against Muslim-majority Rohingyas since 2017. From the time of the 2021 coup through December 2022, government forces damaged or destroyed at least nine Catholic churches in Kloikaw Diocese in Kayah State and severely affected at least 16 out of 38 Catholic parishes. Government forces have also burned villages of religious minorities and even members of the Buddhist majority, destroying homes and houses of worship and schools in the process. The conflict displaced over 1.1 million people during that same timeframe, bringing the total of internally displaced persons (IDPs) in Burma to 1.4 million. This number includes 121,000 from religious minority communities as well as from majority Buddhist groups within Kachin and Shan states. The SAC has deliberately blocked the delivery of humanitarian aid to vulnerable populations.

The increasing conflict between the SAC and the various ethnic armies, as well as forces aligned with the opposition National Unity Government (NUG), have caused the conflict to spread to approximately 83 percent of Burma’s territory. Growing evidence reveals that neither the SAC nor the NUG have the ability to control many of the territories within Burma, including the regions in Rakhine State that are or were formerly home to the Rohingya community. Instead, the ethnoreligious militia known as the Arakan Army \(AA\) has become the dominant political force in that region, lessening the influence of both the SAC and the NUG in Rakhine State. Some members of the Rohingya community who spoke with USCIRF reported that in addition to the Tatmadaw and other Burmese authorities who drove them out of Rakhine State, the AA has also targeted members of their community. The AA has yet to reverse its past opposition to the presence of the Rohingya community in Rakhine.

International efforts to hold the Burmese authorities and the Tatmadaw legally accountable for atrocities they committed against the Rohingya community continued throughout 2022. Related cases were ongoing at the International Court of Justice (ICJ), the International Criminal Court (ICC), and in Argentina under the principle of Universal Jurisdiction. In July, the ICJ dismissed the SAC’s objections to the case, allowing it to proceed.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Burma as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Engage with the prodemocracy Burmese opposition, including the NUG, as well as ethnic armed organizations as outlined in the Burma Unified through Rigorous Military Accountability Act of 2022, and
 - prioritize religious freedom—including justice, voluntary repatriation, and restored citizenship for the Rohingya community—as a prerequisite for recognition and/or ongoing and substantial engagement;
 - Work with Bangladeshi authorities and the international community to assist the Rohingya community with immediate needs while waiting for eventual voluntary repatriation, including identifying solutions to fully scale up livelihood and skills training programs for adults and youths and providing access to the Burmese curriculum to ensure a quality education for all children within Cox’s Bazar; and
- Expand options for Rohingya refugees to resettle in the United States—with an emphasis on especially vulnerable members of that community—and encourage like-minded partner countries to do the same.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Factsheet: Pursuing Justice and Accountability: Next Steps for Rohingya Community of Burma
- Policy Update: Burma
- Podcast: Rohingya Genocide Determination and Accountability
- Commission Delegation Visit: Cox’s Bazar, Bangladesh, in November 2022

Background

Burma's population consists of Buddhists (87.9 percent), Christians (6.2 percent), Muslims (4.3 percent), Animists (0.8 percent), and Hindus (0.5 percent). Although the 2008 constitution treats Buddhism as the de facto state religion while recognizing Christianity, Islam, Hinduism, and Animism, non-Buddhist religious and ethnic minorities have faced longstanding persecution. In 2015, Burma passed race and religion laws with the support of hardline Buddhist nationalist groups such as the Ma Ba Tha. These laws regulate religious conversion, marriage, and births; they also restrict the religious freedom of non-Buddhists, particularly Muslims.

In 2022, the SAC continued to perpetrate mass human rights violations within Burma. The SAC has received support from Russia and China, although there are indications China's past support for the Tatmadaw had waned by late 2022. In July, the SAC ordered the execution of four prodemocracy activists, and in August, General Hlaing extended the state of emergency by six months, citing ongoing efforts to combat the opposition, whom he referred to as "terrorists." In December, an SAC court found former State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi guilty of corruption, sentencing her to 33 years in prison.

Rohingya and Other Refugees

Muslim-majority Rohingya have borne the brunt of religious freedom violations by Burmese authorities and ethnic armies, and the corresponding violence has externally displaced most of that community. Of the reported 600,000 Rohingya who remain within Burma, at least 100,000 are likely in IDP camps. Sea crossings remained a persistent challenge, as an estimated 1,920 people, mostly Rohingya, fled Burma by sea between January and November; of those, a total of 119 were reported dead or missing. Rohingya and other contacts inside Burma generally indicate that the government heavily restricts their freedom of movement, further noting that some Rohingya received university admissions in 2022 but still faced persistent discrimination.

In November, USCIRF traveled to Cox's Bazar, Bangladesh, to assess the conditions of the approximately one million Rohingya who reside in the refugee camps established in 2017. The majority of refugees to whom USCIRF spoke confirmed a desire to repatriate to Burma. USCIRF learned that the Bangladesh government had approved recent initiatives to provide a Burmese curriculum to children within the Rohingya refugee community as well as livelihood and skills training for youths and adults. Multiple groups working with those refugees consistently communicated that Bangladesh and the international community need to urgently scale up such initiatives while seeking creative solutions to funding shortfalls. In 2022, Bangladesh only permitted humanitarian funds for Rohingya refugee programs, insisting that development and other forms of funding would both imply and establish permanence for the refugees' presence in Cox's Bazar.

In November, USCIRF met in Malaysia with refugees of several Burmese diaspora communities, all having fled persecution in their homeland; they represented various Christian groups primarily from Chin State, including the Zomi people. They indicated some in their communities had attempted to return to Burma during the quasi-democratic period that ended with the 2021 coup, but subsequent violence forced them to flee again. These refugees' lack of formal status in Malaysia has prevented them from accessing health-care and other essential services in addition to preventing children from attending schools and adults from accessing stable employment opportunities.

Regional Efforts at Accountability

In April 2021, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and SAC leader General Hlaing met and agreed to a Five-Point Consensus to restore peace to Burma. In 2022, General Hlaing completely disregarded that plan. His government restricted access by ASEAN's Special Envoy to all parties involved in the conflict, including ethnic and religious groups and detained elected leaders. In November, following the 40th and 41st ASEAN Summits, ASEAN leaders reaffirmed Burma's place in their ranks and called on the military to comply with the consensus.

Key U.S. Policy

The United States continued to impose sanctions on the SAC, the Burmese military, and other Burmese authorities throughout 2022, including targeting the regime's military aircraft suppliers. President Joseph R. Biden gave a speech in February denouncing the military junta and marking the coup anniversary. In March, Secretary of State Antony J. Blinken announced that the United States had determined that the atrocities the Burmese authorities and the Tatmadaw committed against the Rohingya in August 2017 constituted genocide. In July, at the ASEAN summit in Bangkok, Thailand, Secretary Blinken urged China and ASEAN members to escalate pressure on Burma's rulers to return to democracy and to hold them accountable to the Five-Point Consensus.

Since 2017 to the end of the reporting period, U.S. contributions to the Rohingya Refugee Crisis reached approximately $1.9 billion, making the United States the largest single donor in support of humanitarian assistance to Rohingya refugees inside and outside Burma. In September, the United States announced more than $170 million in additional humanitarian assistance to Rohingya refugees, and in December it announced a resettlement program for vulnerable members of that community in collaboration with Bangladesh and the United Nations (UN) High Commissioner for Refugees. Also in December, President Biden signed into law the Burma Unified through Rigorous Military Accountability Act as part of the 2023 National Defense Authorization Act, which updated how the U.S. government can engage with ethnic armed organizations and pro-democracy forces.

In December, the United States supported UN Security Council Resolution 2669 denouncing the Tatmadaw's human rights violations since the coup—the first such resolution on Burma to pass since its independence in 1948. On November 30, the U.S. Department of State redesignated Burma as a CPC under IRFA and reimposed as the relevant presidential action existing ongoing restrictions referenced in 22 CFR 126.1.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in China further deteriorated. The government continued to vigorously implement its “sinicization of religion” policy and demand that religious groups support the Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) rule and ideology. The CCP’s United Front Work Department (UFWD), the State Administration for Religious Affairs (SARA), and state-controlled religious organizations are integral in implementing this coercive policy. Although China officially recognizes Buddhism, Catholicism, Islam, Protestantism, and Taoism, groups with perceived foreign connections—such as Uyghurs and other Muslims, Tibetan Buddhists, underground Catholics, and house church Protestants—are especially vulnerable to persecution. The Measures for the Administration of Internet Religious Information Services took effect in March, banning religious content on the internet and further constricting the narrow space for religious groups. The Chinese government and state-owned entities such as Hikvision—accused of complicity in abuses in the Uyghur region, known as Xinjiang—hired former U.S. officials and former members of Congress to lobby on their behalf, undermining religious freedom and related human rights in China.

During the year, Chinese authorities continued their repressive sinicization of Islam and forced assimilation policy in Xinjiang that attempts to eradicate Uyghurs’ and other Turkic Muslims’ distinct ethnoreligious identities. In May, a report based on leaked internal police files from two Xinjiang counties confirmed the existence and brutality of concentration camps where Uyghurs have been detained. The report held high-level CCP and government officials, including CCP leader Xi Jinping, responsible. New reports noted a policy shift from detaining Uyghurs in camps to sending them to prisons. Forced labor, political indoctrination, mass surveillance, an intrusive homestay program that embeds officials in Uyghur households, and forced interfaith marriages also continued.

Government control and suppression of Tibetan Buddhism intensified. Authorities restricted Tibetans’ access to religious sites, banned religious gatherings, destroyed sites and symbols of religious significance, and subjected Tibetan monks and nuns to political indoctrination, including at “reeducation centers.” Authorities reportedly tortured Tibetan monks in prison, including Rinchen Tsultrim and Sherab Gyatso, who suffer from poor health, and they detained Tibetans for religious activities honoring the Dalai Lama or possessing his portraits. The Chinese government repeatedly stated its intent to interfere in the Dalai Lama’s reincarnation, claiming it has the ultimate authority to appoint his successor. In 2022, at least three Tibetans self-immolated, protesting the government’s policies in Tibet. Moreover, authorities reportedly conducted mass DNA collection in Tibet, likely to strengthen surveillance and control there.

Despite renewal in October of the Vatican-China agreement on bishop appointments, in December the Vatican protested the government’s installation of a bishop without its approval. Across China, authorities detained or otherwise forcibly disappeared Catholic priests and bishops—including Bishop Joseph Zhang Weizhu and Bishop Augustine Cui Tai—who refused to join the state-controlled Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association.

Persecution of Protestant house church Christians also intensified in 2022. The government carried out a nationwide crackdown on house churches by harassing, detaining, physically abusing, and sentencing Protestants who refused to join the state-controlled Three-Self Patriotic Movement. Authorities targeted Reformed house church Christians, including Elder Zhang Chunlei of Ren’ai Reformed Church and Pastor An Yankui of Taiyuan Zion Reformed Church. Reports also emerged of harsh persecution of ethnic minority Protestants, such as Lisu and Nu Protestants in Yunnan Province and Kyrgyz Protestants in Xinjiang reeducation camps.

The government continued its persecution of Falun Gong and the Church of Almighty God (CAG), often using “anti-cult” provisions under Article 300 of China’s Criminal Law. In 2022, Falun Gong sources documented 7,331 cases of harassment and arrest, 633 prison sentences, and 172 deaths because of persecution. Reports also documented detention, imprisonment, and torture of CAG members, some of whom reportedly died due to abuses.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate China as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Adopt a whole-of-government approach by elevating and integrating religious freedom as a key strategic objective in U.S. foreign policy toward China and by raising religious freedom concerns in all bilateral dialogues and engagement;
 - Continue imposing sanctions to target Chinese officials and entities responsible for severe religious freedom violations, especially within the CCP’s UFWD, SARA, and the public security and state security apparatus; and
 - Work with like-minded countries in international fora, including the United Nations Human Rights Council (UNHRC), to collectively hold the Chinese government accountable for severe religious freedom violations, including by creating a UN Commission of Inquiry to investigate and identify perpetrators of ongoing genocide and crimes against humanity in Xinjiang and document other severe human rights abuses throughout China.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Support legislation to counter the CCP’s malign influence in the United States, particularly its lobbying efforts that undermine religious freedom and related human rights.

Background

China is officially an atheist state. Of its estimated 1.4 billion people, approximately 18 percent are Buddhist, including Tibetan Buddhists; five percent are Christian; and two percent are Muslim. Other significant religious traditions include Taoism, Falun Gong, and folk religion practices.

The CCP has long repressed religious freedom and in recent years has become increasingly hostile toward religion, implementing campaigns to “sinicize” Islam, Tibetan Buddhism, and Christianity to remove alleged “foreign influences.” These policies require religious groups to support the CCP, including by altering their religious teachings to conform to CCP ideology and policy. Both registered and unregistered religious groups that run afoul of the CCP face harassment, detention, arrest, imprisonment, and other abuses.

Accountability for International Crimes against Uyghurs

In August, the UNHRC’s special rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, concluded that forced labor of Uyghurs and other minorities in Xinjiang “may amount to enslavement as a crime against humanity.” That same month, then UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Michelle Bachelet found that human rights abuses in Xinjiang, including arbitrary and discriminatory detention of Uyghurs and other predominantly Muslim groups, “may constitute international crimes, in particular crimes against humanity.” In October, the UNHRC rejected a motion led by Western member states to hold a debate on China’s human rights abuses against Uyghurs and other Muslims in Xinjiang. UNHRC member states voting against the motion included Muslim-majority countries, such as Qatar, Indonesia, the United Arab Emirates, and Pakistan.

In June, the European Parliament adopted a resolution condemning China’s oppression of Uyghurs, including “mass deportation, political indoctrination, family separation, restrictions on religious freedom, cultural destruction and the extensive use of surveillance.” The resolution further stated that the “birth prevention measures and the separation of Uyghur children from their families amount to crimes against humanity and represent a serious risk of genocide.” In a December resolution, the European Parliament reiterated its recognition of China’s abuses against Uyghurs as constituting crimes against humanity and representing a serious risk of genocide. The Parliament urged European Union (EU) member states to “consider prosecuting Chinese officials deemed responsible for crimes against humanity, on the basis of the principle of universal jurisdiction” and called for “additional EU sanctions targeting Chinese officials and entities responsible for crimes against humanity.”

Religious Freedom in Hong Kong

In May, Hong Kong authorities arrested 90-year-old Cardinal Joseph Zen Ze-kun, bishop emeritus of Hong Kong, accusing him of “colluding with foreign forces” under Hong Kong’s National Security

Law (NSL). Despite his release on bail, his situation remained precarious. Democracy activist and religious freedom advocate Jimmy Lai, another high-profile Catholic figure, pled not guilty to NSL charges in August and court authorities postponed his trial in December. He is currently serving prison terms on other charges related to his political activism. If convicted, both Zen and Lai could face the maximum penalty of life imprisonment. In the U.S. Department of State’s March 2022 Hong Kong Policy Act Report, religious groups stated concern about the Chinese government’s potential “targeting of civil society organizations or individuals affiliated with religious groups that were active in the 2019 pro-democracy movement.”

Key U.S. Policy

In March, the State Department announced visa sanctions on Chinese officials deemed responsible for or complicit in human rights abuses in China and abroad that targeted religious and spiritual practitioners and members of ethnic minority groups, including transnational repression to silence Uyghur American activists. That same month, the U.S. Department of Justice arrested and charged Wang Shujun for engaging in transnational repression activities on behalf of China’s Ministry of State Security (MSS). Wang’s victims included Uyghur and Tibetan activists in the United States and abroad. In May, the Justice Department indicted Wang and four MSS agents on espionage and transnational repression charges.

On November 30, the State Department redesignated China as a CPC under IRFA and reimposed existing restrictions on exports of crime control or detection instruments or equipment to China. In December, the U.S. Department of the Treasury imposed financial sanctions on Wu Yingjie, party secretary of Tibet Autonomous Region (TAR), and Zhang Hongbo, TAR Public Security Bureau director, for human rights abuses in Tibet, pursuant to Executive Order 13818. In addition, the State Department imposed visa sanctions on Zhang and Tang Yong, former deputy director of Chongqing city, for human rights and religious freedom violations in Tibet and against Falun Gong practitioners, respectively.

The Uyghur Forced Labor Prevention Act (UFLPA) took effect in June, and U.S. Customs and Border Protection began implementing it by prohibiting imports from Xinjiang. In August, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security published its initial consolidated UFLPA Entity List, subjecting named Chinese entities to “rebuttable presumptions” in accordance with the UFLPA. In December, the U.S. Department of Commerce added Tianjin Tiandi Weiye Technologies to its Entity List for complicity in human rights violations against Uyghurs and other Turkic Muslims in Xinjiang.

In December, the U.S. House of Representatives passed the Uyghur Policy Act of 2021 (H.R.4785) to address human rights issues in Xinjiang. Members of Congress introduced bills in 2022 to counter foreign lobbying on behalf of countries like China, including the PAID OFF Act of 2022 (S.4901), the SHAME Act (H.R.9140), and the Disclosing Foreign Influence in Lobbying Act (S.4254).

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Factsheet: State-Controlled Religion and Religious Freedom Violations in China
- Hearing: China’s Religious Freedom Violations: Domestic Repression and Malign Influence Abroad
- Podcast: The Plight of Christians in China

Additional view statement on China by Commissioners Abraham Cooper, David Curry,
Frederick A. Davie, Sharon Kleinbaum, Mohamed
Magid, Stephen Schneck, Nury Turkel, Eric Ueland, and Frank Wolf

At the height of Cold War hostilities in 1980, it would have been unthinkable for any reputable firm to take on the Soviet Union as a client.

And yet today, untold profits are being raked in by lobbyists willing to whitewash the record and aims of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) and government.

It's time to make this activity illegal.

As the Commission's report documents, the Chinese Government is an equal opportunity persecutor of people of faith—Christians, Tibetan Buddhists, Uyghur Muslims, and Falun Gong practitioners.

In Xinjiang, the CCP is committing genocide, operating a network of mass internment camps and prisons and systematically separating Uyghur children from their parents.

Any notion of Hong Kong's autonomy is fantasy. A once vibrant, open society has been transformed with shocking speed. The ruthless crackdown on dissent found 90-year-old Catholic Cardinal Zen in its crosshairs.

In every corner of the globe the Chinese government actively works to subvert U.S. interests.

FBI Director Christopher Wray said, "the counterintelligence and economic espionage efforts emanating from the government of China and the Chinese Communist Party are a grave threat to the economic well-being and democratic values of the United States."

The Chinese government oversees the most advanced surveillance state in human history and actively exports these technologies to other repressive regimes worldwide.

As USCIRF recommends in this report, we urge the Biden Administration and Congress to ban lobbying groups and law firms from representing the Chinese government and its interests.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Cuba worsened. Throughout the year, the Cuban government tightly controlled religious activity through surveillance, harassment of religious leaders and laypeople, forced exile, fines, and ill treatment of religious prisoners of conscience. Religious leaders and groups that are unregistered or conducted unsanctioned religious activity—as well as journalistic reporting on religious freedom conditions—faced relentless oppression from the Office of Religious Affairs (ORA) and state security forces.

The Cuban government regularly targeted members of religious communities who refused to abide by strict regulations set out by the ORA. Authorities subjected pastors to detention, interrogation, threats of prison sentences on false charges, and confiscation of property. In February, authorities detained Reverend Yordanys Díaz Arteaga, the president of the Christian Reformed Church of Cuba, after an extensive search of his home and the confiscation of technology belonging to his church. He was later interrogated and threatened with criminal charges at an unknown location and held incommunicado under effective house arrest. Christian Solidarity Worldwide (CSW) reported that Reverend Díaz became a target of the government after his denomination withdrew from the regime-aligned Cuban Council of Churches. He reportedly arrived in the United States in August. In April, evangelical couple Pastors Mario Jorge Travieso and Velmis Adriana Medina Mariño planned an April 29–30 prayer event called “Breaking the Chains” to focus on the wives and mothers of political prisoners. The regime made repeated threats to Pastors Travieso and Medina and several members of their church who planned to participate. Authorities arbitrarily detained the pastors, interrogated them for six hours, and threatened them with imprisonment. The organizers canceled the event due to the regime’s various threats.

USCIRF received reports indicating that Cuban authorities detained and interrogated citizens who traveled or planned to travel to the United States in 2022, including Catholic layman Dagoberto Valdés and his son Javier Valdés Delgado as well as Mildrey Betancourt Rodríguez, a member of the Alliance of Non-Registered Churches. Similarly, in October the Office of the Directorate of Identification, Immigration, and Foreigners of Cuba arbitrarily barred Imam Abu Duyanah, imam of the Cuban Association for the Dissemination of Islam, from traveling to Mecca for “reasons of public interest” without any specifications.

Additionally, threats and persecution by the government caused several religious leaders to leave Cuba in 2022. In March, Pastor Enrique de Jesús Fundora Pérez of the Apostolic Movement fled the country to seek asylum in Switzerland after state security officials threatened him with up to 30 years in prison for “sedition” and “incitement to commit a crime.” He drew the ire of authorities when he gave monetary and spiritual aid to families of political prisoners from the July 11, 2021 (J11) protests. Pastor Alain Toledano, a prominent Cuban religious leader of the unregistered Emmanuel Church of the Apostolic Ministry, has experienced severe harassment from the Cuban government for over 20 years. In June, Cuban state security presented Toledano with an ultimatum: leave the country within 30 days or face imprisonment. The United States granted him and his family emergency parole in July. In September, Father David Pantaleon, head of Cuba’s Jesuit Order and president of the Conference of Religious Men and Women in Cuba, had to leave the country after the government refused to renew his residence permit. During an interview in his native Dominican Republic, Father Pantaleon reported that the ORA cited his support for political prisoners and the Jesuits’ critical position toward the regime as the main reasons for his expulsion.

The Cuban government continued to target independent journalists who report on religious freedom by threatening criminal charges and fines, often under Decree Law 370, and imposing travel restrictions. Cuban authorities twice interrogated and fined young Catholic layman and journalist Adrián Martínez Cádiz this year.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Cuba as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Encourage Cuban authorities to extend an official invitation for unrestricted visits by USCIRF, the U.S. Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom, and the United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief; and
 - Impose targeted sanctions on Cuban government agencies and officials responsible for severe violations of religious freedom—including Caridad Diego, head of the ORA—by freezing those individuals’ assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Raise human rights and democracy concerns in Cuba and highlight the situation facing religious leaders and organizations persecuted by the Cuban government, among others.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom Conditions in Cuba
- Report: Constitutional Reform and Religious Freedom in Cuba
- Event: Constitutional Reform and Religious Freedom in Cuba

Background

While there are no independent sources on Cuba's religious demographics, a reported 60–70 percent of Cuba's estimated population of 11.1 million self-identify as Catholic. Approximately 25–30 percent identify as unaffiliated or another religion, such as Jehovah's Witnesses, Methodists, Seventh-day Adventists, Anglicans, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Buddhists, Muslims, Jews, Quakers, Moravians, and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. An estimated 70 percent of Cubans engage in one or more practices associated with Santería, a syncretic religion born out of the Yoruba tradition mixed with elements of Catholicism.

Cuba is a one-party system under the ruling Cuban Communist Party, with no independent judiciary. The state regulates and controls religious institutions through the ORA of the Central Committee of the Cuban Communist Party. The Law of Associations requires religious organizations to apply to the Ministry of Justice, where the ORA is housed, for registration. However, the Ministry of Justice continues to deny registration for religious groups and leaves long-standing requests for registration unanswered. Unregistered religious groups are particularly vulnerable, as membership or association with an unregistered religious group is a crime. The ORA exercises direct and arbitrary control over the affairs of registered religious organizations, requiring permission for virtually any activity other than regular worship services.

The Ladies in White

The Ladies in White (Damas de Blanco) is an organization of wives and relatives of dissidents imprisoned in 2003. Cuban authorities actively surveil and violently detain members of the Ladies in White and prevent them from attending religious services on Sundays.

The Cuban regime has aggressively targeted the leader of the movement, Berta Soler. In January, Soler and her husband Ángel Moya announced a campaign seeking the release of all political prisoners from the J11 protests. Subsequently, authorities subjected Soler and Moya to repeated arbitrary detentions. These detentions often included interrogations at police stations and fines. Such offenses occurred on 15 consecutive Sundays between January and May. In September, Soler detailed that government agents parked a large container in front of her house, reportedly to obscure when authorities arrest her or her husband when they leave their home.

In September, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights issued follow-up precautionary measures to its 2013 decision in favor of the Ladies in White, appealing to the Cuban government to maintain "necessary measures to protect the rights to life and personal integrity of the members of the Ladies in White." The decision also documents numerous cases of harassment, detentions, and fines up to September 2022.

Religious Prisoners of Conscience

Several religious leaders and laypeople remained in prison at the end of 2022 for their participation in the J11 protests. Select cases are included in USCIRF's Freedom of Religion or Belief \(FoRB\) Victims List, including Christian pastors and Santería practitioners.

Pastor Lorenzo Rosales Fajardo of the Monte de Sion Independent Church participated in the J11 protests and was detained that day. The government claims that Pastor Rosales Fajardo was involved in perpetrating a violent attack during the protest, despite evidence to the contrary. The Cuban government tried him in December 2021 on charges of "disrespect," "assault," "criminal incitement," and "public disorder" and sought to impose a 10-year sentence. Pastor Rosales Fajardo was sentenced to eight years in prison in April, but the government reduced his sentence to seven years in May. In June, a court upheld his revised sentence. According to CSW, only the prosecution was allowed to provide evidence, which included testimony from at least 12 policemen.

President of the unregistered Free Yoruba Association of Cuba (Asociación de Yorubas Libres de Cuba, or "Free Yorubas") Donaida Pérez Paseiro and her husband, the community's vice president Loreto Hernández García, were charged with "public disorder," "disobedience," "spreading the epidemic," and "incitement" and eventually sentenced to eight years in prison. Pérez Paseiro experienced multiple medical emergencies while in prison and authorities reportedly tried to force her to renounce her faith. Hernández García reportedly suffers from several health conditions, including asthma, hypertension, diabetes, and other cardiac issues. Prison authorities also reportedly tried to force him to renounce his faith. In May, Radio Televisión Martí reported that Hernández García's health has severely deteriorated in prison, as authorities fail to provide him food that takes into consideration his diabetes. He received medical treatment in a hospital, but state security forced him back into prison in June.

Key U.S. Policy

The U.S. government continued to place robust sanctions on Cuban officials. In January, the U.S. Department of State imposed visa restrictions on eight officials "implicated in attempts to silence the voices of the Cuban people through repression, unjust detentions, and harsh prison sentences" of J11 protesters. Further rounds of visa restrictions came in June and July when the State Department imposed restrictions on an additional 33 individuals for "unfair trials and unjust sentencing and imprisonment" of J11 protesters, plus media and communications officials who "formulate and implement policies that restrict Cubans' ability to freely access and share information and who engage in the spread of disinformation."

In September, the U.S. Embassy in Havana announced the resumption of immigrant visa processing and consular services for the first time since 2017.

On November 30, the State Department for the first time designated Cuba as a CPC under IRFA and imposed as the relevant president action the existing ongoing restrictions referenced in 31 CFR 515.201 and the Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity (LIBERTAD) Act of 1996 (Helms-Burton Act), pursuant to section 402(c) (5) of the Act. Cuba previously had been on the State Department's Special Watch List since 2019.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Eritrea remained extremely poor. The government did not register any new religious organizations, and individuals practicing faiths other than the four officially recognized by the government faced intimidation and prosecution by Eritrean authorities. Members of officially recognized religions also faced restrictions and government backlash for practicing their faith. Dozens of religious prisoners of conscience remain imprisoned in decrepit, unsanitary, and inhumane conditions.

Eritrean authorities continued to detain dozens of people imprisoned for their religious belief or practice. The government detained 20 Jehovah’s Witnesses for conscientious objection to military service and other expressions of their faith.

In February, Patriarch Abune Antonios, the former leader of the Eritrean Orthodox Church, died at age 94 after spending a decade and a half under house arrest because of his religious beliefs, his calls for the release of political prisoners, and his resistance to government pressure to excommunicate members of the church.

In October, security forces detained three Catholic leaders for two months for raising Eritrea’s human rights violations in their sermons. Prison conditions are abysmal, with detainees living in squalor and subject to violence and intimidation.

Eritrean forces have also continued to engage militarily in the Tigray region of neighboring Ethiopia, where ethnically affiliated rebel fighters seek respect for autonomous local governance. In past years, Eritrean troops operating in support of the Ethiopian government in the region have attacked religious sites and triggered community-based religious violence in some areas. Reports suggest that in 2022, Eritrean forces in Ethiopia continued to commit human rights abuses and undermine the peace process, exacerbating the likelihood that instability could yield additional religious freedom violations in Ethiopia.

The Tigrayan crisis has also impacted Eritrean refugees living in Ethiopia, some of whom fled Eritrea’s repressive religious and human rights policies. Violence from both sides in the conflict has destabilized the Tigray region, causing some Eritrean refugees to flee back across the border to their country of origin or face violence and abuses.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Eritrea as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Maintain the existing, ongoing arms embargo referenced in 22 CFR 126.1(a) of the International Traffic in Arms Regulations as the presidential action imposed as a consequence of the CPC designation to encourage religious freedom improvements;
- Impose targeted sanctions on Eritrean government agencies and officials responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals’ assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations;

- Engage with the Eritrean government to end religious persecution of unregistered religious communities, grant full citizenship rights to Jehovah’s Witnesses, and release the remaining detainees held on account of their religious activities; and
- Coordinate an initiative through the International Religious Freedom or Belief Alliance (IRFBA) to encourage the Eritrean government to extend an official invitation for unrestricted visits by the United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Eritrea, the UN Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, and the International Red Cross.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Highlight religious freedom issues in Eritrea through legislation, hearings and briefings, and a congressional delegation trip to Eritrea to engage with Eritrean officials to encourage them to advance human rights and religious freedom.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Factsheet: Religious Freedom Concerns in the Horn of Africa
- Factsheet: Overview of Refugees Fleeing Religious Persecution Globally
- Press Statement: USCIRF Mourns the Passing of Patriarch Abune Antonios

Background

Following military conflict with and secession from neighboring Ethiopia, Eritrea gained independence in 1993. With a population of just over six million people, Eritrea's religious demography is difficult to assess. The government recognizes three Christian denominations—Eritrean Orthodox, Catholic, and Protestant—estimated to comprise between 49 and 63 percent of the population. It also recognizes Islam, estimated to comprise between 37 and 49 percent of the population. Minority communities adhere to the Baha'i, Jewish, and traditional animist faiths.

The Eritrean constitution protects citizens' rights to freedom of religion or belief. The law and constitution prohibit religious discrimination and provide for freedom of thought, conscience, and belief and the freedom to practice any religion and to change one's religion. However, the government regularly violates these rights in practice. Proclamation No. 73 of 1995 permits the government to exert full control over religious activities in the country. The government of Eritrea requires all religious groups to apply for registration, with only the four approved communities allowed to operate since 2002. Applications from other faith communities have been denied for being "defective," according to the Office of Religious Affairs. Without formal registration, faith groups' rights are denied and they are prohibited from building or owning houses of worship or engaging in religious practices such as praying in groups.

Eritrean authorities signed the Joint Declaration of Peace and Friendship with neighboring Ethiopia in July 2018. The accord ended over two decades of war between the two countries. Following the peace treaty, President Isaias Afwerki delivered a much anticipated speech on Independence Day, saying "the beginning of a new era" had come to Eritrea. Historically, Eritrea justified its oppression of political and civil rights by citing security concerns related to the ongoing war with Ethiopia. Many observers anticipated that the President's commitment would translate into advancements for human rights, including religious freedom. However, nearly five years after the agreement, over a thousand political prisoners, including many imprisoned for exercising their freedom of religion or belief, remain behind bars.

Religious Prisoners of Conscience

In February 2022, Patriarch Abune Antonios, the former leader of the Eritrean Orthodox Church, died at age 94 after spending a decade and a half under house arrest because of his religious beliefs and advocacy. Patriarch Antonios had been imprisoned for over a decade after condemning government interference in church affairs and calling for the release of imprisoned Christians. In 2006, Eritrean authorities removed him from his position as the ordained head of the Eritrean Orthodox Church and placed him under house arrest. A year later, he was forcibly disappeared from his residence and taken to an undisclosed location. He was reportedly denied proper medical care throughout his custody.

In October, security forces detained Catholic leaders Bishop Fikremariam Hagos Tsalim, Father Mihretab Stefanos, and Friar Abbot Abraham at the airport in Asmara as they returned from traveling in Europe. The government did not publicize charges against Tsalim and his colleagues, but sources from the ground report that they were targeted for publicly highlighting human rights violations in Eritrea in their homilies. Authorities held them in detention for two months before releasing them on December 29.

The Eritrean government continued to imprison 20 Jehovah's Witnesses: 14 men and six women. These religious prisoners include an 80-year-old man and two men who have been in prison for more than 17 years without formal charges against them. Eritrean officials reportedly refused to meet with representatives of the Jehovah's Witness community to discuss these violations.

Conditions for religious prisoners of conscience in Eritrea are particularly poor. First-hand accounts describe physical abuse, sexual violence, and torture as normal and ongoing practices. Prisoners are often denied medical treatment, and many have died in prison due to severe human rights abuses. Many prisons reportedly use metal shipping containers to hold large numbers of people. In prison, praying aloud, singing, preaching, and possessing religious books are banned. Arrested individuals have reported being asked to sign documents certifying that they renounce their faith or that they join or return to the Eritrean Orthodox Church; if they do not, they face transfer to worse conditions.

Cross-Border Military Activity

In 2022, Eritrean forces continued to engage militarily in neighboring northern Ethiopia, where their activities have historically included attacks on religious infrastructure. This conflict has also aggravated religious freedom challenges in Eritrea itself. The Eritrean government has reportedly increased conscription to meet the demand for military support in Tigray, raising the risk of prosecution against conscientious objectors. Eritrean refugees who fled to Ethiopia to avoid restrictive Eritrean government policies, including religious restrictions, have been detained and forcibly returned to Eritrea in the context of the Tigray conflict. Targeted violence by the Tigray People's Liberation Front has also impacted Eritrean refugees, likely including those fleeing religious persecution.

Key U.S. Policy

The United States has extremely limited diplomatic relations with Eritrea. Diplomats continued to raise issues of human rights and religious freedom in official conversations with representatives from the Eritrean government. Due to religious freedom violations and other human rights abuses, the Joseph R. Biden administration declined to invite Eritrean government leaders to the high-profile U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit held in December in Washington, DC.

On November 30, the U.S. Department of State redesignated Eritrea as a CPC for engaging in and tolerating particularly severe violations of international religious freedom. In 2022, the United States renewed sanctions imposed in 2021 under Executive Order (E.O.) 13818 (which builds upon and implements the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act) and E.O. 14046 (Imposing Sanctions on Certain Persons with Respect to the Humanitarian and Human Rights Crisis in Ethiopia) against Eritrean entities and individuals perpetuating the crisis in Ethiopia.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in India continued to worsen. Throughout the year, the Indian government at the national, state, and local levels promoted and enforced religiously discriminatory policies, including laws targeting religious conversion, interfaith relationships, the wearing of hijabs, and cow slaughter, which negatively impact Muslims, Christians, Sikhs, Dalits, and Adivasis (indigenous peoples and scheduled tribes). The national government also continued to suppress critical voices—particularly religious minorities and those advocating on their behalf—including through surveillance, harassment, demolition of property, and detention under the Unlawful Activities Prevention Act (UAPA) and by targeting nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) under the Foreign Contribution Regulation Act (FCRA).

The Indian government invoked the UAPA and the Sedition Act throughout the year to target freedom of religion and expression, creating an increasing climate of intimidation and fear. Authorities surveilled, harassed, detained, and prosecuted a number of journalists, lawyers, rights activists, and religious minorities advocating for religious freedom. Hundreds of cases remained pending against individuals for involvement in the 2019 peaceful protests against the Citizenship \(Amendment\) Act (CAA), which provides a pathway to citizenship strictly for non-Muslims from Pakistan, Afghanistan, and Bangladesh. As of 2022, only 92 of more than 700 cases had reached trial, and many of those arrested under the UAPA continued to languish in jail. During India’s fourth Universal Periodic Review (UPR), United Nations (UN) member states emphasized protections for religious minorities and expressed concern over the broad application of India’s “anti-terror” laws. Additional official efforts, such as the National Register of Citizens (NRC) process in Assam, also aimed to identify “undocumented” Bengali-speaking Muslims.

The continued enforcement of discriminatory laws facilitated a culture of impunity for widespread campaigns of threats and violence by mobs and vigilante groups. In March, for example, Karnataka’s state government issued a hijab ban in public schools.

Despite widespread protests and instances of violence, state high court judges upheld the ban, agreeing with the government’s argument that the hijab is not essential to practicing Islam. India’s state governments also continued to pass and enforce anti-conversion laws, currently existing in 12 states, including legislation in multiple states aimed to prohibit and criminalize interfaith marriages. Public notice requirements for interfaith marriages imposed in 10 states have, at times, resulted in violent reprisals against couples. The ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) committed to enforcing harsher penalties for interfaith marriages in its 2022 election manifesto for Uttar Pradesh.

Violent attacks were also perpetrated across India under the justification of protecting cows from slaughter or transport, which is illegal in 18 states. Examples of violence against Christians, Muslims, and Dalits around suspicions of cow smuggling were reported in Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, and Delhi. In August, BJP member Gyan Dev Ahuja was recorded publicly calling for his listeners to “kill anyone involved in cow slaughter.”

Throughout the year, destruction of property—including places of worship in predominantly Muslim and Christian neighborhoods—continued. In June, local authorities demolished the homes of three Muslim families in Uttar Pradesh following protests against derogatory language used by members of the BJP. Hindu nationalists bulldozed a Catholic center near Mangalore in February and attacked, looted, and destroyed the homes of hundreds of Christians in December for their refusal to convert to Hinduism. In addition, at least four madrasas (Islamic seminaries) were demolished following a statement in May from the Chief Minister of Assam that madrasas should be eliminated.

Social media platforms continued to facilitate widespread disinformation, hate speech, and incitement of violence toward religious minorities. In February, Twitter removed a caricature shared by the verified account of Gujarat BJP depicting Muslim men hung by a noose.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Designate India as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Advance human rights for all religious communities in India and promote religious freedom, dignity, and interfaith dialogue through bilateral engagement and in multilateral forums;
 - Condemn ongoing religious freedom violations and support religious organizations and human rights groups targeted for their advocacy of religious freedom; and
 - Impose targeted sanctions on Indian government agencies and officials responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals’ assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Raise religious freedom issues in the U.S.-India bilateral relationship and highlight concerns through hearings, briefings, letters, and congressional delegations.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom Conditions in India
- Issue Update: India’s State-Level Anti-Conversion Laws
- Podcast: Deteriorating Religious Freedom Conditions in South Asia
- Podcast: Anti-Conversion Laws and Growing Intolerance in India

Background

India is the world's most populous democracy, with an estimated 1.4 billion people, 79.8 percent of whom are Hindu, 14.2 percent Muslim, 2.3 percent Christian, and 1.7 percent Sikh. Smaller religious groups include Buddhists, Jains, Baha'is, Jews, Zoroastrians (Parsis), and nonreligious persons. India's constitution establishes the nation as a secular, democratic republic, and Article 25 grants all individuals freedom of conscience, including the right to practice, profess, and propagate religion. Despite these secular principles, since 2014, the Indian government—led by the BJP—has facilitated and supported national and state-level policies that undermine religious freedom for minority groups.

Anti-Conversion Laws

At the end of the reporting period, 12 of India's 28 states had legislation that criminalized religious conversion in various circumstances (Arunachal Pradesh, Chhattisgarh, Gujarat, Haryana, Himachal Pradesh, Jharkhand, Karnataka, Madhya Pradesh, Odisha, Rajasthan, Uttarakhand, and Uttar Pradesh). These laws are not limited to instances of coercion, and they contain broad and vague language that can be used to target voluntary religious conversions. Common features of these laws include prohibitions on conversions, requirements to notify the government of one's intent to convert, and burden-shifting provisions that presume an accused individual is guilty.

These laws carry penalties of hefty fines and imprisonment and disproportionately target Christians and Muslims. Increasingly, anti-conversion laws are used to prevent interfaith marriages or relationships, including so-called "Love Jihads," a derogatory term that targets Muslims and refers to conversions occurring in the context of interfaith marriages. Under the Special Marriage Act, interfaith marriages require a 30-day notice period, allowing individuals to object to the marriage. In April, the state of Haryana enacted its Prevention of Unlawful Conversion of Religion Act prohibiting conversion "by marriage or through marriage." Authorities, including police, at times assist Hindu vigilante groups to "enforce" these anti-conversion laws.

Citizenship (Amendment) Act (CAA) and National Register of Citizens (NRC)

Since the CAA's introduction in 2019, over 200 petitions have been filed against the religiously discriminatory act. The CAA, combined with the NRC, is perceived as an attempt to disenfranchise Muslims of Indian citizenship. The CAA aims to provide citizenship to non-Muslim migrants (Sikhs, Hindus, Christians, Buddhists, Jains, and Parsis) from Afghanistan, Bangladesh, and Pakistan. While the act's purported intention is to aid persecuted religious minorities, it does not include vulnerable communities such as Rohingya Muslims, Ahmadiyya Muslims, Hazara Shi'a Muslims, or Baha'is. Since its enactment, journalists, activists, and students have been arrested and detained for their participation in widespread protests against the law.

The NRC is unique to the state of Assam, and since its publication in 2019 it aims to distinguish Indian citizens from "undocumented migrants." Those deemed "foreign" under the NRC include Assam's Bengali-speaking Muslims, who have also been arrested under the UAPA in some instances. As many as 700,000 Muslim residents in Assam are estimated to be at risk of having their citizenship revoked.

Attacks on Religious Minorities

In 2022, there were numerous attacks against religious minorities and their places of worship. Demolitions of mosques in Muslim communities led to arrests and violent clashes. In May, the Home Minister of Madhya Pradesh ordered the demolition of homes in predominantly Muslim neighborhoods. While the Indian Supreme Court stated that demolitions "cannot be retaliatory," the practice has continued.

Mob attacks against religious minorities and members of scheduled tribes further demonstrate how vigilantes and Hindu nationalists act with impunity. In January, a Hindu nationalist group allegedly beat a Muslim man for traveling with a Hindu woman in Mangalore. In March, a Hindu nationalist group attacked a Christian youth leader in Karnataka for sharing about Christianity outside a college. Social media and news channels served as a platform for Hindu nationalist groups to stoke tensions and encourage violence toward minority groups.

Sexual Violence and Harassment of Religious Minorities

Muslim women continued to face discrimination and harassment, both at the local and state levels. In January, GitHub shut down an Indian website that published the names of—and purported to "auction off"—Muslim women who had publicly opposed Hindu nationalism and the government's treatment of religious minorities. That same month, students across India protested against policies that would require female students to remove their head scarves or stay home from school. These demonstrations were met with rival protests by Hindu nationalists. In February, sectarian violence erupted between those supporting the right to wear the hijab and Hindu students wearing saffron robes. Subsequently, in Karnataka the BJP banned any religious garb in public schools. In October, the government released 11 men who, as part of a Hindu nationalist mob, were convicted for the gang rape of Bilkis Bano, a pregnant Muslim woman, and for attacking her family during the 2002 violence in Gujarat. In Uttar Pradesh, reports of sexual assault and attacks against Dalits also continued.

Key U.S. Policy

In 2022, the Joseph R. Biden administration again failed to designate India as a CPC for engaging in particularly severe religious freedom violations. The United States and India continued to maintain strong bilateral ties around economic trade and technology. Trade reached \$120 billion in 2022, making the United States India's largest trading partner. President Biden and Prime Minister Narendra Modi interacted on multiple occasions, including the G20 and G7 Summits and the Quad Leaders Summit. In July, U.S. Agency for International Development Administrator Samantha J. Power traveled to India to discuss challenges of food insecurity, climate change, and the COVID-19 pandemic. In September, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Indo-Pacific Security Affairs Ely S. Ratner cochaired the sixth U.S.-India 2+2 Intersessional Dialogues in New Delhi.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Iran sharply deteriorated. Following the death of Mahsa Zhina Amini after her arrest and torture by police for wearing an “improper hijab,” Iran repressed nationwide protests with lethal force, detained and killed children, sexually assaulted and raped detained protesters, and engaged in other gross violations of human rights, including executions of protesters without due process. Scores of protesters received charges grounded in Islamic religious concepts that in Iran carry the death penalty, raising serious concerns of mass executions. Iran’s government also escalated its repression of Baha’is, restricting access to religious sites, issuing legal rulings supporting confiscation of Baha’i properties, denying Baha’is entrance to universities, and conducting systematic arrests. Security forces arrested 30 Yarsanis in Khermanshah and sentenced two Yarsanis, including a community leader, to prison terms for “propaganda against the state.” Iranian security forces destroyed a Sunni mosque in Zahedan and threatened Sunni clerics who condemned the killing of at least 96 protesters following Friday prayers on September 30. Prison officials at Bander Abbas prison tortured Sunni cleric Musa Rahimi to death following his arrest for holding prayers on the date designated by Saudi Arabia instead of Iran’s religious establishment. The Tehran Revolutionary Court sentenced an Iranian Christian to a 10-year prison sentence, and he and two other Christians also received a 10-year “deprivation of social rights” upon their release for their membership in a house church. Several other Christians faced sentencing and prison time on similar charges. In January, Ministry of Intelligence officials in Dezful summoned eight Christians and pressured them to abandon their faith. Several members of Iran’s Gonabadi Sufi community remained under alleged arbitrary detention, including in solitary confinement. Iran also continued to persecute nontheists and members of spiritualist movements. In August, the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC) arrested eight followers of Erfan-e Halgheh. Iran’s leadership also spread explicitly antisemitic messages over traditional and social media. It continued targeting Iranian religious minorities abroad, in one case, forcibly repatriating dissidents.

In 2022, women and girls continued to face religious freedom repression in Iran. Religiously grounded laws in Iran continued to allow impunity for men who murdered women for violating “family honor.” Security forces arrested and deployed egregious violence against women and girls who peacefully protested the increased enforcement of mandatory headscarf laws. Golrokh Iraee, a women’s rights activist who previously served prison time for writing an unpublished short story criticizing the stoning of adulterers, was arrested in September and moved in November from Qarchak to Evin Prison. Iran also targeted and actively executed lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and intersex (LGBTQI+) Iranians on religious grounds, including those outside the country. Prison officials hanged two gay men on sodomy charges in January and two other gay men in July. In August, a court in Urmia issued death sentences against two LGBTQI+ activists for “corruption on Earth.”

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Iran as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Impose targeted sanctions on Iranian government agencies and officials responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals’ assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations;
- Issue clarifications of general and specific sanctions licenses, expedite the processing of general license applications, and continue issuing new general licenses that facilitate financial and technological support for Iranians asserting their freedom of religion or belief through peaceful demonstrations and labor strikes; and

- Work with members of the International Religious Freedom or Belief Alliance and other international associations to support the United Nations (UN) Fact Finding Mission to Iran and support a Security Council referral of the situation in Iran to the International Criminal Court for crimes against humanity against those asserting freedom of religion or belief.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Reauthorize and exercise oversight to ensure implementation of the Lautenberg Amendment, which aids persecuted Iranian religious minorities seeking refugee status in the United States, and urge the Biden administration to expand the program’s capacity to process, vet, and resettle Iranian religious minorities.
- Convey, through legislation, press statements, and media messaging, bipartisan support for Iranian protesters’ calls for greater religious freedom in Iran.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom in Iran in 2022
- Special Report: Religious Propaganda in Iran
- Podcast: The Nexus of Religious Freedom and Women’s Rights in Iran
- Podcast: Religious Prisoners of Conscience in Iran

Background

The Islamic Republic of Iran is a theocratic, authoritarian state with restricted political participation. Ninety to 95 percent of the population are Shi'a Muslim, while Sunni Muslims account for 5–10 percent. Approximately 0.3 percent ascribe to other religions, including the Baha'i faith, Zoroastrianism, Christianity, and Judaism. While the Jaafari school of Shi'a Islam is the official religion, the constitution extends full respect to the five major Sunni schools. It also recognizes Christians, Jews, and Zoroastrians as protected minorities. Five of the parliament's 290 seats are reserved for religious minorities—two for Armenian Christians and one each for Assyrian/Chaldean Christians, Jews, and Zoroastrians. There are two Hindu temples, and Buddhism has historical influences. Iran is home to several other religious groups that face persecution, including Mandeans, Yarsanis, nonbelievers, and spiritual movements, such as Erfan-e Halgheh.

Religious Minorities

In 2022, Iran's government escalated its persecution of Baha'is, conducting nationwide arrests and spreading propaganda against the group. In February, Judge Mohammadghasem Ain al-Kamali of Branch 1 of the Semnan Revolutionary Court ruled that the Execution of Imam Khomeini's Order (EIKO) could legally confiscate the property of Baha'is following false allegations against a Baha'i man in the province. Branch 54 of the Tehran Appeals Court upheld the decision in August following the destruction of six Baha'i houses in Rooshankoo. In July, Iran rearrested three members of the now disbanded Friends of Iran (Yaran Iran) who previously spent a decade in prison. In late August, Ministry of Intelligence officials arrested 14 Baha'is during a religious study in Ghaemshahr. Throughout the fall and winter of 2022, Iran continued its systematic campaign of Baha'i arrests.

Iran's government also continued using antisemitic rhetoric to incite intolerance against Jews. In April, an IRGC-affiliated think tank declared there was no "real antisemitism" in Nazi Germany. Ayatollah Ali Khamenei regularly uses antisemitic tropes such as Jewish financial domination and deliberately conflates Judaism and Israeli government policy in his tweets. U.S. Department of State Special Envoy to Monitor and Combat Antisemitism Deborah E. Lipstadt has condemned repeatedly this "vile antisemitic rhetoric."

The government also targeted Christian Iranians, particularly converts from Islam. In February, the Tehran Court of Appeal ordered a review of the sentences of nine Christians on the grounds that membership in a house church did not constitute a threat to national security, leading to their acquittal. However, the lower courts continued sentencing Christians on national security grounds. Pastor Youcef Nadarkhani, who is serving a six-year sentence for leading a 400-member house church, was allowed a five-day furlough for Easter but returned to Evin Prison shortly thereafter. In May, the Civil Court of Bandar Anzali levied a fine of $185 (six million tomans) on Christian convert Rahmat Rostimpour for violating Article 500 of Iran's penal code prohibiting education "contrary to Islam." In August, Iran's Supreme Court declined to review the 10-year prison sentence against house church leader Anooshavan Avedian. That same month, house church leader Josef Shahbazian began a 10-year sentence at Evin Prison following a June 2020 raid on a private home in which security forces arrested 30 Christians. In October, however, two Christian prisoners, Nasser Navard Goltapeh and Fariba Dalir, were released from Evin Prison. Following the outbreak of mass protests, the Ministry of Intelligence reportedly pressured Armenian Christian churches and church leaders to issue statements supporting the government.

Sunni Muslim Iranians faced repression in 2022 as security forces targeted communities in the geographic and social periphery in response to protests. Cleric Musa Rahimi reportedly died under torture in a prison in Bandar Abbas following his arrest for announcing the start of Eid al-Fitr in alignment with the Saudi date rather than the Iranian date. In September, security forces in Zahedan shot at least 96 people leaving the Makki Grand Mosque to attend protests. In November, security forces opened fire on worshipers at the mosque. Both the IRGC and a Shi'a religious official linked to Ayatollah Khamenei condemned Sunni clerics for comments supporting protesters and criticizing the government. Iran's most prominent Sunni cleric, Molavi Abdolhamid, continued to express his support for protesters.

Iran also continued its mistreatment of Gonabadi Sufis in 2022. Three Gonabadi Sufis at Great Tehran Prison were denied access to visitors in April. In August, Gonabadi Sufi journalist Kasra Nouri was moved from Adel Abad Prison in Shiraz to a local Ministry of Intelligence office. During protests in December, security forces arrested Gonabadi Sufi Mohsen Afrouz.

Key U.S. Policy

The Joseph R. Biden administration has supported protesters in Iran calling for greater religious freedom. In remarks at the UN General Assembly, President Biden lauded "the brave women of Iran who right now are demonstrating to secure their basic rights." In November, the United States voted in favor of establishing a UN fact-finding mission on Iran at the UN Human Rights Council. That same month, Vice President Kamala D. Harris stated that the United States would "work with our partners to remove Iran from the UN Commission on the Status of Women." In December, the United States voted in favor of the resolution—which it cosponsored—to remove Iran from the commission.

The U.S. Department of the Treasury and the State Department continued to impose targeted sanctions on Iranian officials for violating religious freedom in 2022, including leaders in Iran's IRGC and Basij militias. In September, the Treasury issued General License D-2, which facilitates outside technological support to Iranians protesting for greater religious freedom and other rights.

On November 30, the State Department redesignated Iran as a CPC under IRFA and, as the relevant presidential action, imposed travel restrictions on Iranian officials complicit in religious freedom violations.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Nicaragua worsened considerably. The government of Nicaragua, under President Daniel Ortega and Vice President Rosario Murillo, escalated its campaign of harassment and severe persecution against the Catholic Church by targeting clergy, eliminating Church-affiliated organizations, and placing restrictions on religious observances. Violations of religious freedom that occurred in previous years—such as hate speech against the Catholic Church and denial of entry into the country for clergy—continued in 2022 as well.

The Nicaraguan government heightened its crackdown against members of the clergy. Despite the high level of persecution against Catholic leaders since protests in 2018, 2022 was the first year in which the government imprisoned members of the clergy. Father Manuel Salvador García was sentenced in June to two years in prison for threatening a crowd with a weapon, and later he was sentenced to another two years and eight months for allegedly assaulting a parishioner. José Leonardo Urbina was sentenced to 30 years in prison for abuse of a minor; his secret trial lasted only two days and lacked due process. Additionally, the government made several high-profile moves against Rolando Álvarez, Catholic bishop of the Diocese of Matagalpa and Estelí. Following multiple instances of harassment in spring and summer, in August police conducted an early-morning raid on Bishop Álvarez's church in Matagalpa, detained him, and put him under house arrest in Managua. Additional priests detained in 2022 include Óscar Benavidez in August and Enrique Martínez Gamboa in October. The government also engaged in hate speech against clergy and expelled priests or prevented them from returning to the country.

Within the context of a widespread crackdown on civil society organizations critical of the government, the Ortega regime has also pressured the Catholic Church by hindering or preventing Church-affiliated organizations and services from operating. In 2022, the regime shut down over 3,000 nongovernmental organizations, often citing legislation such as the “foreign agents” law or Law No. 977, Law against Money Laundering, Financing of Terrorism and Financing of the Proliferation of Arms, to justify its consolidation of control over civil society. The National Assembly ordered the revocation of the legal status of a Catholic university and several Catholic educational and charitable projects in the city of Estelí and later approved a law that would strengthen its control over educational institutions and strip funding from the Jesuit-run school Universidad Centroamericana (Central American University).

In May, the Nicaraguan Institute of Telecommunications and Postal Services (TELCOR) ordered the removal of the Episcopal Conference of Nicaragua's Canal Católico (Catholic Channel). In its place the regime began airing Nicarao TV, widely perceived as a propaganda network. TELCOR also ordered the closure of at least eight radio stations operated by the Catholic Church. In August, police in Sébaco forcibly entered the chapel where Radio Católica operated. They seized broadcast equipment and forced the church's priest to take refuge in the parish house for several days.

In June, the government canceled the legal status of Missionaries of Charity—an order established by Mother Teresa—for allegedly failing to declare the origins of its funding in line with Law No. 977. Missionaries of Charity had operated in Nicaragua since 1988, running a “children's nursery, a home for abused and abandoned girls and a nursing home.” The government also forced the nuns in the order to leave the country.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Nicaragua as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Impose targeted sanctions on Nicaraguan government agencies and officials responsible for violence and other punitive actions against houses of worship, religious leaders, and organizations by freezing those individuals' assets and/or barring their entry into the United States
- under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations;
- Press the Nicaraguan government to unconditionally release religious prisoners of conscience, commit to due process for religious detainees, and permit access to Bibles and religious consultations for all political prisoners; and
- Exercise increased scrutiny of any loan or financial or technical assistance provided by international financial institutions for projects in Nicaragua, pursuant to the Reinforcing Nicaragua's Adherence to Conditions for Electoral Reform Act of 2021 (RENACER Act).

The U.S. Congress should:

- Hold public hearings to amplify congressional concerns over religious prisoners of conscience in Nicaragua and work with like-minded parliamentarians in other countries to advocate for their release and the release of other prisoners of conscience.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom in Nicaragua in 2022
- Hearing: Crackdown on Religious Freedom in Nicaragua
- Podcast: Nicaragua's Assault on Religious Freedom
- Podcast: Deteriorating Religious Freedom Conditions in Nicaragua

Background

President Ortega is the head of state and government of Nicaragua. He and his party, the Sandinista National Liberation Front, exercise authoritarian control over the government and electoral process. Roman Catholics account for about 50 percent of Nicaragua’s population; Evangelical Christians account for 33.2 percent; followers of unspecified religions account for 13.2 percent; Jews, Muslims, and others account for 2.9 percent; and 0.7 percent do not adhere to any religion.

Nicaragua is embroiled in a social and political crisis that started after the government’s repression of peaceful protests in April 2018. The Ortega administration began targeting the Catholic Church after it aided demonstrators and individual clergy voiced opposition to the government’s human rights abuses. Since 2018, government actors and pro-Ortega groups have routinely intimidated and harassed worshippers; vandalized churches; and targeted clergy with defamatory accusations, arbitrary arrests, death threats, deportations, and violent attacks.

Persecution of Bishop Rolando Álvarez

The Nicaraguan government’s persecution against Bishop Álvarez is illustrative of its crackdown on members of the clergy. Álvarez was a mediator in the national dialogue in 2018 and was critical of the government’s human rights record. In May, police placed Álvarez under 24-hour surveillance. As a result, Álvarez took refuge in a church in Managua—which the police then surrounded—and began a hunger strike to protest his treatment. Police allowed the bishop to return to his own diocese in Matagalpa but escorted his vehicle for the two-hour journey. On August 5, the national police announced an investigation into Bishop Álvarez. He was under de facto house arrest at his Matagalpa church residence for two weeks until police conducted an early-morning raid on the church, detained the bishop, and put him under house arrest in Managua. He was charged with “conspiracy,” “spreading false news,” and “damaging the Nicaraguan government and society.” Vice President Murillo justified the bishop’s arrest by arguing that it served to “guard the peace, security, and tranquility of Nicaraguan families.” In February 2023, a court sentenced Bishop Álvarez to 26 years in prison and also announced that “he would be fined and stripped of his Nicaraguan citizenship.”

Authorities detained seven other men at the same time as Bishop Álvarez’s arrest, including three priests, one deacon, two seminarians, and one layman. In February 2023, the regime sentenced the men to 10 years in prison for “conspiracy to undermine national integrity” and “for spreading false news.” Days later, the regime released the seven men and exiled them to the United States along with over 200 other political prisoners.

Harassment of Clergy

The government continued to use similar tactics as in previous years to incite fear in the Catholic community. It again expelled priests and prevented them from returning to the country after traveling abroad, without any official explanation. Monsignor Waldemar Sommertag served as the papal nuncio in Managua starting in 2018. In March 2022, the Nicaraguan government abruptly withdrew his credentials and forced him to leave the country. In September, the Directorate General of Immigration and Nationality notified Father Juan de Dios García via email that he was banned from returning after he visited family in the United States. A short while later, the regime denied entry to Father Guillermo Blandón after he traveled to Israel with a stopover in the United States.

Shortly after Pope Francis acknowledged dialogue between the Vatican and the Nicaraguan government, President Ortega—during a televised speech—called the Church a “perfect dictatorship” and renewed his old accusations of clergy as “killers” and “coup plotters.” In December, he also accused clergy of “calling for bloodshed” during the 2018 protests.

Prohibition of Religious Rituals

The regime continued to arbitrarily ban Catholic processions in several cities. In August, the police prohibited a procession in Managua for “reasons of internal security.” In lieu of the procession, parishioners gathered peacefully under heavy police presence for Mass at the cathedral. Similar prohibitions occurred at least four times in September, twice in October, and twice in November.

Key U.S. Policy

The U.S. government continued to enact robust sanctions against Nicaraguan organizations and officials. The RENACER Act expanded the Corrupt and Undemocratic Actors list to include Nicaragua. In March, the U.S. Department of State added nine Nicaraguan officials to the list for “undermining the democratic processes or institutions of Nicaragua” during the 2021 sham election, making those individuals ineligible for visas and admission to the United States. Further rounds of visa restrictions came in June and July when the State Department imposed restrictions on an additional 116 individuals for undermining democracy, including judges, prosecutors, National Assembly members, and Interior Ministry officials.

In June, the U.S. Department of the Treasury’s Office of Foreign Assets Control sanctioned the state-owned mining company Empresa Nicaraguense de Minas and one official in the government pursuant to Executive Order 13851. In October, the Joseph R. Biden administration announced another slate of sanctions against individuals and entities in Nicaragua “to hold the Ortega-Murillo regime accountable for its escalating human rights violations, continued dismantling of democratic institutions,” and attacks on civil society. These measures put pressure on Nicaragua’s gold sector, allow for future trade restrictions, and impose visa restrictions on more than 500 individuals “who work for the Nicaraguan government or formulate, implement, or benefit from policies or actions that undermine or injure democratic institutions.”

On November 30, the State Department for the first time designated Nicaragua as a CPC under IRFA and imposed as the relevant president action the existing ongoing restrictions referenced in section 5 of the Nicaragua Investment Conditionality Act of 2018 (the NICA Act). Nicaragua previously had been on the State Department’s Special Watch List since 2019.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Nigeria remained poor, with both state and nonstate actors committing particularly severe violations of religious freedom. While some officials worked to address drivers of religious freedom violations, others actively infringed on the religious freedom rights of Nigerians, including by enforcing blasphemy laws. Criminal activity and violent armed group incidents impacting religious freedom worsened.

A Shari'a court sentenced Sheikh Abduljabar Kabara to death for blasphemy. Judicial authorities sentenced humanist leader Mubarak Bala to 24 years in prison for blasphemy and other charges. A high court ruled that blasphemy laws in Shari'a penal codes are constitutional and remanded the blasphemy case against Yahaya Sharif Aminu back to Shari'a courts for retrial. In September, armed officers conducted a surprise raid on the residence of the presiding judge of the Kano Court of Appeal, who was the only judge who dissented the ruling. Kabara, Bala, and Sharif Aminu remained incarcerated at year's end, along with several other individuals accused of blasphemy. Meanwhile, religious police arrested 19 people accused of organizing a wedding ceremony for two individuals of the same sex in Kano State, where Muslims convicted of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and intersex \(LGBTQI+\) activity face execution or public flogging under Shari'a legal codes.

Mob violence in Zamfara killed Christian university student Deborah Yakubu due to blasphemy accusations. Officials in Bauchi State arrested Christian healthcare worker Rhoda Jatau for blasphemy for comments she shared on social media in the aftermath of the violence. Authorities only brought minor charges against two of the instigators of violence against Yakubu and no charges against the instigators of violence against Jatau.

Rampant violence and atrocities across Nigeria continued to impact freedom of religion or belief, including militant Islamist violence; some forms of identity-based violence; mob violence; and criminal, political, and vigilante violence impacting worship. The Islamic State in West Africa Province (ISWAP) claimed several attacks against Christian communities, including allegedly killing 40 people in an attack on a Catholic Church in Ondo State during Pentecost Sunday services and bombing a market in Borno State that sold alcohol.

In many of the country's complex violent crises, armed actors targeted worshipers and religious leaders. Attacks targeted churches and mosques in Kaduna State, mosques in Zamfara and Katsina states, and several Christian leaders in other parts of the country. Tensions at the intersection of ethnicity, religion, and geographic heritage yielded atrocities in several regions, including in Plateau, Benue, and Anambra states.

Federal authorities accelerated efforts to address violence impacting religious freedom, including by institutionalizing harsher punishments against perpetrators, improving military efforts to neutralize Islamist fighters in the north, and strengthening efforts to investigate and arrest perpetrators of the most egregious attacks. The effectiveness of these efforts remained in question, while in some regions state and local officials failed to fully prosecute individuals who incited mob violence against alleged blasphemers.

Security and judicial sector reform aimed at deterring and providing redress for religious violence remained stagnant, with such efforts largely absent from or peripheral to leading politicians' policy priorities. The government's human rights record continued to be poor, with reports emerging of a decades-long forced abortion campaign facilitated by the Nigerian military against rescued abductees of Boko Haram.

Despite continued religious freedom challenges in the country, in November the U.S. Department of State failed to designate Nigeria as a country of particular concern (CPC) for engaging in particularly severe violations of religious freedom.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Designate Nigeria as a "country of particular concern," or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA), and redesignate Boko Haram and ISWAP as "entities of particular concern," or EPCs, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by IRFA;
 - Appoint a Special Envoy for Nigeria and the Lake Chad Basin to maximize U.S. diplomatic efforts to address religious freedom violations and atrocity risk in Nigeria and the Lake Chad Basin; and
 - Diplomatically, financially, and administratively support Nigerian civil society organizations to coordinate a national dialogue on implementing United Nations Human Rights Council \(UNHCR\) Resolution 16/18 and to promote religious freedom and tolerance while safeguarding freedom of expression.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Revitalize the bipartisan Nigeria caucus to place due focus on security, atrocity risk, human rights, and religious freedom challenges in Nigeria; and
 - Request that the Government Accountability Office (GAO) investigate the effectiveness of U.S. assistance to Nigeria in achieving religious freedom objectives in the country.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Hearing: Religious Freedom, Violence, and U.S. Policy in Nigeria
- Policy Update: Violence and Religious Freedom in Nigeria
- Policy Update: Blasphemy Laws in Nigeria
- Commission Delegation Visit: Abuja in June 2022
- Podcast: Religious Freedom Takeaways on the Ground in Nigeria

Background

Nigeria is the most populous country in Africa, with an estimated 219 million people. Among these, 53.5 percent identify as Muslim; 45.9 percent identify as Christian; and 0.6 percent identify with other religious or nonreligious beliefs, including atheism, African traditional religions, the Baha'i faith, Buddhism, Hinduism, and Judaism. Nigeria's 1999 Constitution protects freedom of religion or belief and prohibits the state from establishing a state religion. The Nigerian Criminal Code includes a penalty of up to two years' imprisonment for blasphemy. Twelve northern states use Islamic Shari'a criminal and family codes alongside civil and customary laws. These Shari'a codes prohibit blasphemy and other offenses based on Islamic law as interpreted by each state's High Court.

Blasphemy Cases

In December, a Shari'a court sentenced Sheikh Abduljabbar Kabara to death by hanging for offending the Prophet in his preaching. In April, a court in Kano State sentenced humanist leader Mubarak Bala to 24 years in prison for blasphemy after he pled guilty against the advice of his lawyers and seemingly against his own convictions. In August, a high court in Kano ruled that blasphemy laws in Shari'a penal codes are constitutional and remanded the blasphemy case against Tijaniyya Muslim Yahaya Sharif Aminu back to Shari'a courts for retrial.

In May, a mob in Zamfara State stoned Christian student Deborah Yakubu to death and burned her body because they perceived remarks she made in a WhatsApp thread as insulting to Islam. In June, a mob in Abuja stoned and burned Muslim Ahmad Usman to death for alleged blasphemy, although investigations implicated organized criminal activity as likely playing a major role in the incident.

Some government officials made public statements condemning mob violence against alleged blasphemers and issued temporary curfews to quell rising threats to public safety. However, authorities limited charges against two alleged perpetrators of violence that killed Yakubu to bailable offenses. When a mob in Bauchi State mobilized to retaliate against Christian healthcare worker Rhoda Jatau for making comments they considered blasphemous in the aftermath of Yakubu's murder, authorities arrested Jatau on charges of blasphemy instead of arresting those who incited violence against her.

Violence Impacting Religious Freedom

Rampant violence and atrocities across Nigeria continued to impact freedom of religion or belief for many Nigerians. During a rampage across several villages in February, ISWAP burned at least one church. In April, ISWAP bombed a bar in Taraba State in an attempt to target "infidel Christians," killing three and injuring 19. Investigations allege that ISWAP killed at least 40 people in a June attack on Pentecost Sunday targeting a Catholic Church in Owo, Ondo State. In October, ISWAP attacked a church in Kogi State, killing two people and injuring several others. Boko Haram also continued to commit violations in its campaign to install undemocratic Islamic rule, with 100 of the school-girls they abducted in Chibok in 2014 still missing.

Complex violent crises across the country involving dynamic alliances of insurgent, criminal, and vigilante actors also impacted freedom of worship for both Muslims and Christians. In Kaduna State in March, alleged bandits reportedly abducted 14 worshipers from a mosque during Isha prayers. In June, two simultaneous attacks on churches in Kaduna State reportedly killed eight people and resulted in 38 abductions. In July, armed actors abducted two priests in Kaduna State, resulting in the death of one. In September, gunmen kidnapped dozens of worshipers from Friday prayers in Zamfara State, and later that month armed assailants killed 15 people during an attack on a mosque. In December, gunmen abducted 19 worshipers from a mosque in Katsina State.

In Plateau State in March 2022, tensions triggered by an attack on a convoy of Muslim worshipers in August 2021 reignited, resulting in fatalities from both Muslim and Christian communities. In May, armed assailants killed a pregnant Muslim Hausa woman and her four children, with local analysis concluding that discrimination likely played a key role in the attack.

In January, the Nigerian government issued a policy considering all activities by or in support of "bandits" and "gunmen" as prosecutable under the Terrorism Prevention Act (2013). In April, the Nigerian Congress made kidnapping punishable by death and criminalized ransom payments in an attempt to curb growing abduction rackets that have impacted religious leaders and worshipers. Authorities also made several prominent arrests, including five individuals for conducting the Pentecost church attack in Owo.

Despite these efforts, ISWAP expanded its territorial reach and conducted several sophisticated attacks in 2022. While the Nigerian government often projects an overly optimistic picture of its capacity and readiness to combat violent actors, sources from the ground allege that chronic institutional challenges plague the effectiveness of Nigeria's security and judicial systems.

Key U.S. Policy

In 2022, the Joseph R. Biden administration again failed to designate Nigeria as a CPC for engaging in particularly severe religious freedom violations, having removed it from the CPC list the previous year. In April, the U.S. Congress approved the release of a nearly \$1 billion weapons sale to Nigeria that was paused due to human rights concerns, garnering criticism from human rights organizations. The U.S. Embassy in Nigeria held several trainings with Nigerian security forces to improve civilian protection in military operations. The U.S. government continued to support peacebuilding programs and efforts to promote interfaith dialogue and harmony. The U.S. Embassy also demonstrated commitment to protect Nigeria's religious and cultural heritage, including by funding a project to protect the Busanyin Shrine in the Osun Osogbo Sacred Grove.

NORTH KOREA

USCIRF–RECOMMENDED FOR COUNTRIES OF PARTICULAR CONCERN (CPC)

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in North Korea remained among the worst in the world. North Korea’s ruling ideology, known as Kimilsungism-Kimjongilism, forbids competing ideologies—including religious ones—and treats religion as an existential threat. The country’s most fundamental legal document, known as the Ten Principles for the Establishment of a Monolithic Leadership System, requires absolute loyalty and obedience to the teachings of North Korean leaders. The Ten Principles contradict the rights and freedoms enshrined in international law and in the country’s own constitution, which nominally grants religious freedom. The ruling Workers’ Party of Korea actively enforces the Ten Principles at all levels of government and across society, monitors and controls religious belief and activities, and systematically denies North Korean citizens the right to religious freedom.

North Korea’s discriminatory songbun system classifies citizens based on their perceived loyalty to the state. Religious practitioners belong to the “hostile” class and are considered enemies of the state, deserving “discrimination, punishment, isolation, and even execution.” The government attempts to provide an illusion of religious freedom to the outside world through state-controlled religious sites and organizations, which include the Korean Buddhist Federation, the Korean Christian Federation, and the Korean Catholic Association. In reality, religious freedom remains nonexistent as authorities actively and systematically target and persecute religious groups and adherents, including Christians, practitioners of shamanism, and others.

Protestant Christians remain especially vulnerable to persecution. According to a 2022 report by the War Crimes Committee of the International Bar Association and the Committee for Human Rights in North Korea, human rights abuses—including religious freedom abuses—in North Korean detention centers amount to crimes against humanity. Christians make up a disproportionate number of detainees in these detention centers. Authorities consider the practice of their faith a political crime and levy particularly harsh punishments on prisoners from that community, including severe torture and killing. For example, a former detainee at the Onsong labor detention center estimated that between 50 and 60 percent of the facility’s population are Christian or have had contact with Christianity. The Ministry of State Security, North Korea’s secret police agency, is the principal perpetrator responsible for the persecution of Christians.

Furthermore, North Korean law bans shamanistic practices as “superstitious acts.” The Ministry of People’s Security, North Korea’s police agency, is primarily responsible for abuses against practitioners of shamanism. Information on religious freedom conditions for practitioners of other major religious traditions in North Korea—such as Buddhism, Catholicism, and Chondoism—remains severely limited.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate North Korea as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Integrate security and human rights as complementary objectives in broader U.S. policy toward—and in bilateral negotiations with—North Korea; and
- Impose targeted and broad sanctions—including coordinated, multilateral sanctions with international partners—as appropriate for religious freedom violations in North Korea and consider lifting certain sanctions in return for concrete progress in religious freedom and related human rights.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Reauthorize the North Korean Human Rights Act and swiftly confirm the nominee for Special Envoy for North Korean Human Rights Issues.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Special Report: Kimilsungism-Kimjongilism and the Right to Freedom of Religion, Thought, and Conscience in North Korea
- Hearing: U.S. Policy and Freedom of Religion or Belief in North Korea

Background

Information about religious demographics and religious freedom conditions in North Korea is difficult to confirm and often outdated. Historically, North Koreans followed Buddhism and an indigenous syncretic religious movement known as Chondoism (Religion of the Heavenly Way). The country was also home to a sizeable Christian community before the Korean War (1950–1953), with Pyongyang known as the “Jerusalem of the East,” but successive crackdowns have shrunk the Christian population to an estimated two percent of the total population. Shamanism and traditional folk religion practices, such as fortunetelling, are also prevalent.

North Korean Defectors and Refugees

Defectors and refugees from North Korea are primary sources of information about religious freedom conditions in the country. In recent years, however, the number of North Koreans arriving in South Korea has decreased significantly due to tightened security along borders between China and North Korea as well as between China and Southeast Asian countries; the COVID-19 pandemic has contributed to a further decrease. According to the South Korean Ministry of Unification, only 67 North Koreans defected to South Korea in 2022—one of the lowest numbers in over 20 years. The Chinese government views all North Korean refugees as illegal economic migrants and repatriates them if discovered, without regard to their risk of persecution upon return, in violation of its international obligations. North Korean refugees who have contact with Christian missionaries and nongovernmental organization workers in China face severe punishment when repatriated to North Korea. Chinese authorities have expelled hundreds of South Korean missionaries since 2017, many of whom played an instrumental role in helping North Korean refugees escape.

International Accountability in the United Nations (UN)

In March, Tomás Ojea Quintana, then Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea, submitted a report to the UN Human Rights Council (UNHRC) raising concerns about North Korea’s deprivation of its people’s fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of expression, religion, and thought. It recommended that North Korea “review the Law on the Elimination of Reactionary Thought and Culture, and promote and protect freedom of expression, access to information and freedom of religion, including for young people.” In August, the UNHRC appointed Elizabeth Salmón of Peru as the incoming Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea.

In April, the UNHRC adopted a resolution condemning “[long-standing] and ongoing systematic, widespread and gross human rights violations and other human rights abuses committed” in North Korea. It expressed grave concerns over North Korea’s persecution of individuals on religious and other grounds; denial of the right to freedom of thought, conscience, and religion, including the right to adopt a religion or belief; and discrimination based on the songbun system. The UNHRC also called on the North Korean government to ensure the right to thought, conscience, and religion or belief. In December, the UN General Assembly passed a resolution expressing concerns over North Korea’s dire human rights conditions and calling for international efforts to improve them.

Key U.S. Policy

There was little to no change in U.S.-North Korea relations in 2022. Officials with the administration of President Joseph R. Biden repeated the U.S. commitment to diplomacy and dialogue with North Korea, without preconditions, to which the North Korean government offered no positive response. During President Biden’s visit with South Korean President Yoon Suk Yeol in May, the two leaders issued a joint statement that expressed grave concern over the human rights situation in North Korea. In December, U.S. Secretary of State Antony J. Blinken, U.S. Secretary of Defense Lloyd J. Austin, and their Australian counterparts issued a joint statement during the U.S.-Australia Ministerial Consultations that called on North Korea to engage in denuclearization dialogue, while expressing grave concern over severe human rights violations in that country.

On November 30, the U.S. Department of State redesignated North Korea as a CPC under IRFA and reimposed as the relevant presidential action the existing, ongoing restrictions to which the country is already subject under Sections 402 and 409 of the Trade Act of 1974. That same month, pursuant to Executive Order 13687, the U.S. Department of the Treasury sanctioned North Korea’s Ministry of State Security Border Guard General Bureau (BGGB) for its complicity in human rights abuses along that country’s borders with China and Russia. On January 23, 2023, shortly after the reporting period, President Biden nominated Julie Turner for the position of Special Envoy on North Korean Human Rights Issues.

In March, Representative Young Kim (R-CA) and Representative Ami Bera (D-CA) introduced in the U.S. House of Representatives a bipartisan bill to reauthorize the North Korean Human Rights Act (H.R.7332), but the House took no further action on the measure. In May, Senator Marco Rubio (R-FL) and Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) introduced the Senate version of the bill (S.4216), which the Senate passed in December. As the law expired at the end of fiscal year 2022 and was not reauthorized by the conclusion of the 117th Congress (January 2021–January 2023), members of the House and Senate are likely to reintroduce new versions.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, Pakistan’s religious freedom conditions continued to deteriorate. Religious minorities were subject to frequent attacks and threats, including accusations of blasphemy, targeted killings, lynchings, mob violence, forced conversions, sexual violence against women and girls, and desecration of houses of worship and cemeteries. Members of the Shi’a Muslim, Ahmadiyya Muslim, Christian, Hindu, and Sikh communities faced the continued threat of persecution via harsh and discriminatory legislation, such as anti-Ahmadiyya and blasphemy laws, as well as increasingly aggressive societal discrimination amid a rise in radical Islamist influence. These laws have enabled and encouraged radical Islamists to operate with impunity, openly targeting religious minorities or those with differing beliefs, including nonbelievers.

The new government under Prime Minister Shahbaz Sharif, which took office in April, weaponized the country’s blasphemy laws against former Prime Minister Imran Khan and his cabinet members. Religious minorities, however, were especially vulnerable to prosecution or violence based on blasphemy allegations in a society that has grown increasingly intolerant of religious diversity. Blasphemy cases remained a substantial threat to religious freedom, as did the sort of mob violence that has long accompanied such accusations. In February, a court sentenced Notan Lal—the owner and principal of a private school in Ghotki, Sindh—to life in prison under Article 295(c) of the Pakistani Penal Code (PPC) after a student accused him of insulting the Prophet three years prior. His appeal remains pending despite pleas of innocence. That same month, an angry mob in Punjab Province stoned to death Muhammad Mushtaq, a mentally ill man accused of burning the Qur’an; a mob of some 300 people then hanged his body from a tree.

Societal violence and targeted killings also continued to plague the country’s religious minorities. In January, unknown gunmen killed a Christian priest and wounded another as they drove home from Sunday Mass in Peshawar. In May, unidentified assailants gunned down two Sikh businessmen in Peshawar, and a seminary student stabbed to death an Ahmadiyya man in Okara District, Punjab Province. The victim’s family members accused the chief cleric of the seminary of provoking the student to commit murder by delivering sermons calling for violence against the Ahmadiyya community. From January to July alone, that community reported the desecration of over 170 graves and at least two houses of worship, often with the assistance of authorities. In July in Punjab Province, 53 Ahmadiyya graves were desecrated in Gujranwala District under the supervision of the police, while security forces arrested several Ahmadis for conducting Islamic ritual slaughter in celebration of the Eid al-Adha holiday and thereby “posing as Muslims.” In June, a group of armed men desecrated a Hindu temple in Karachi after two spokespersons for India’s ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) reportedly made insulting statements about the Prophet Muhammad; Pakistan’s government vowed to hold the perpetrators accountable, although it had made no arrests by the end of 2022.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Pakistan as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA), and lift the waiver releasing the administration from taking otherwise legislatively mandated action as a result of the designation;
- Enter into a binding agreement, under Section 405(c) of IRFA, with the Pakistani government to encourage substantial steps to address religious freedom violations with benchmarks, including but not limited to:
 - Release blasphemy prisoners and other individuals imprisoned for their religion or beliefs;
 - Repeal blasphemy and anti-Ahmadiyya laws; until such repeal, enact reforms to make blasphemy a bailable offense, require evidence by accusers, ensure proper investigation by senior police officials, allow authorities to dismiss unfounded accusations, and enforce existing Penal Code articles criminalizing perjury and false accusations;
- Remove requirements for self-identification of religion on identity documents;
- Address radical Islamist rhetoric, which often precedes attacks on minorities, while protecting freedom of expression;
- Hold accountable individuals who incite or participate in vigilante violence, targeted killings, forced conversions, and other religiously based crimes; and
- Reform educational textbooks, curricula, and teacher training materials to ensure content is inclusive of and not discriminatory toward religious minorities.
- Impose targeted sanctions on Pakistani government agencies and officials responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals’ assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Incorporate religious freedom concerns into its larger oversight of the U.S.-Pakistan bilateral relationship through hearings, letters, and congressional delegations and advocate for the release of religious prisoners of conscience in Pakistan, including Junaid Hafeez, Asif Pervaiz, Notan Lal, Zafar Bhatti, and Aneeqa Ateeq.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom in Pakistan in 2022
- Podcast: Deteriorating Religious Freedom Conditions in South Asia

Background

Pakistan's population is an estimated 96.5 percent Muslim (85–90 percent Sunni, 10–15 percent Shi'a, and 0.2 percent Ahmadi) with smaller populations of Hindus, Christians, Sikhs, Buddhists, Baha'is, and Zoroastrians comprising the remaining 3.5 percent. Pakistan was established as an Islamic Republic in 1956, granting special status to Islam; the constitution establishes Islam as the state religion, defines the country's purpose "wherein the Muslims shall be enabled to order their lives . . . in accordance with the teachings and requirements of Islam," and allows only Muslims to serve as president and prime minister. Pakistan's constitution nominally protects religious freedom by prohibiting faith-based discrimination and guaranteeing the right to religious practices and education while reserving 10 seats for religious minorities in the National Assembly, four in the Senate, and 23 in four provincial assemblies. However, a 1974 constitutional amendment declares Ahmadis non-Muslims, excluding them from representation. In addition, Pakistan maintains several laws, including criminal blasphemy and anti-Ahmadiyya laws, that further restrict the freedom of religion or belief.

Blasphemy and Anti-Ahmadiyya Laws

Sections 295 and 298 of the PPC criminalize acts and speech insulting religion or defiling the Qur'an, the Prophet Muhammad, places of worship, or religious symbols. These vague provisions are frequently abused to levy false accusations against Shi'a Muslims, Ahmadiyya Muslims, Christians, Hindus, Sikhs, and others who do not adhere to the majority Sunni interpretation of Islam. Those accused of blasphemy face violence, imprisonment with limited opportunity for bail, and even the death sentence, although no blasphemy convict has been executed by the state in Pakistan. In January 2023—after the reporting period—the National Assembly passed a draft law that would increase the penalties for certain blasphemy cases to life imprisonment while eliminating their eligibility for bail.

Articles 298(b) and 298(c) of the PPC prohibit Ahmadis from self-identifying as Muslim, forcing them to sign a declaration swearing they are non-Muslim to obtain basic civil rights, such as the right to vote or receive national identification cards. Ahmadiyya Muslims are prohibited from citing the Qur'an or Hadith; displaying Qur'anic text on gravestones, houses of worship, or elsewhere; sharing their faith; or calling their places of worship "mosques."

Sexual Violence and Forced Conversion of Women and Girls

Abductions, forced conversion to Islam, rape, and forced marriage—frequently allowed with impunity—remain imminent threats for religious minority women and children, particularly Christians, Hindus, and Sikhs. In January, neighbors abducted, forcibly converted to Islam, and married Mahnoor Ashraf, a 14-year-old Christian girl in Lahore, to a 45-year-old Muslim man. In March, in Sindh Province, a man attempting to abduct and forcibly marry 18-year-old Hindu Pooja

Kumari shot and killed her when she resisted. In April, 12-year-old Christian Zarvia Pervaiz was abducted, forced to convert to Islam, and married to a 40-year-old man; a Lahore judge dismissed her parents' case in August, claiming that she had converted and married "of her own free will" despite her status as a minor.

In October, concerns over such abuses prompted several United Nations special rapporteurs, including those on freedom of religion or belief and on violence against women and girls, to express their concern to the government of Pakistan. That communication provided a series of individual examples, which it referred to as "indicative of a wider phenomenon throughout the country," and it warned of the reported "inaction and complicity of security forces and the judiciary in the face of these abuses."

Radical Islamism: Armed Groups and Political Influence

Radical Islamist influence continued to worsen in 2022, including through armed groups, political factions, and individuals, many of whom used rhetoric, disinformation, or direct violence targeting religious minorities. Tehreek-e-Labbaik Pakistan (TLP) gained popularity, using blasphemy laws as rallying points. In March, the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS) killed over 60 in a deadly attack on a Shi'a mosque, marking yet another instance of extremist violence against religious minorities.

Key U.S. Policy

The United States has long considered Pakistan's stability and security a foreign policy priority, making it one of the largest recipients of U.S. foreign aid—more than \$32 billion over the last two decades. It increased that level of aid in 2022, largely due to the devastating floods that covered vast swaths of Pakistani territory from June to August, killing over 1,700 and destroying around 2.3 million homes. By the start of 2023, the U.S. government had provided over $98 million in humanitarian assistance in response to that crisis, largely through the U.S. Agency for International Development. This assistance came in addition to U.S. support in 2022 for Pakistani efforts to combat the COVID-19 epidemic, including pledging and partially implementing the donation of an additional 77 million vaccine doses. In October, the United States hosted a visit from Pakistan's outgoing Chief of Army Staff, General Qamar Javed Bajwa, just weeks after announcing plans to move forward with a $450 million deal to support the Pakistani Air Force's F-16 program. Reports suggest that these dynamics may point to improvement in bilateral relations, long complicated by the two countries' starkly differing agendas and interests vis-à-vis Pakistan's neighbors in Afghanistan, India, and China.

On November 30, the U.S. Department of State redesignated Pakistan as a CPC under IRFA. However, as in prior years, the State Department issued a national interest waiver that absolved Pakistan of liability to sanctions or other significant penalties that would otherwise accompany that designation.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in the Russian Federation continued to decline. Authorities increasingly prosecuted members of religious minority communities using a range of legal mechanisms, including a 1996 religion law; laws on terrorism, extremism, and “undesirable organizations”; provisions criminalizing blasphemy; and others. These vague laws continued to give authorities broad powers to outlaw religious groups, prosecute individuals based on their religious speech or religious activities, and ban religious literature deemed “extremist.” The government also continued to fine Protestants, Catholics, Muslims, Old Believers, and others for illegal missionary activities and other violations of various restrictions.

Russian authorities frequently relied on the country’s extremism statutes to punish individuals for participating in so-called “extremist” organizations—without adequately defining “extremism.” In 2022, the government detained, imprisoned, and fined adherents of Muslim theologian Said Nursi, members of the Muslim group Tablighi Jamaat, and Jehovah’s Witnesses on such charges. Since the Supreme Court declared Jehovah’s Witnesses “extremist” in 2017, authorities have subjected the group to 1,874 home searches, with 201 occurring in 2022. In June, the European Court of Human Rights concluded that Russia had violated Jehovah’s Witnesses’ rights and ordered the government to pay pecuniary damages. By the end of the year, more than 100 Jehovah’s Witnesses remained in Russian custody.

Officials continued to detain and sentence Muslims on unsubstantiated terrorism and sedition charges for their real or alleged affiliation with Hizb ut-Tahrir \(HT\), an Islamist group that Russia has designated a terrorist organization. International human rights organization Memorial reported in December that at least 328 people were in prison or faced prosecution or investigation for such alleged affiliations, of whom 108 had received prison sentences between 10–15 years and 105 had received sentences of 15 years or more. In Russian-occupied Crimea, occupation authorities have regularly imprisoned predominantly Muslim Crimean Tatars who oppose the Russian occupation, charging them in connection with their Muslim identity and religious activities.

In February, Russian military forces launched a full-scale and unjustified invasion of Ukraine with the purported goal of the “demilitarization and denazification” of the country. This “denazification” rhetoric often resulted in antisemitic Russian propaganda and remarks from government officials, including Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov. As part of its war propaganda, the Russian government also pointed to the alleged flourishing of “satanism” and other religious movements—so-called “cults”—in Ukraine, with one official calling for the “desatanization of Ukraine.” Dissidents within Russia voicing opposition to the war on religious grounds faced fines and detention for allegedly discrediting and disseminating false information about the Russian army. Religious leaders who refused to voice support for the invasion, such as the chief rabbi of Moscow, were forced to flee Russia.

Ukrainian religious communities living in areas invaded by Russia experienced gross religious freedom violations perpetrated by Russian forces. Several reports document Russian military personnel threatening, detaining, disappearing, and torturing religious figures in order to exert control and influence over local populations. In the first six months of the war, at least 20 religious figures were reported killed and another 15 kidnapped. Russian artillery and gunfire regularly destroyed and damaged Ukrainian places of worship and other religious facilities. By December, the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) had verified damage to at least 102 religious sites, with other organizations reporting damage to more than 300.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Russia as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Impose targeted sanctions on Russian government agencies and officials responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals’ assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations; and
 - Allocate greater funding to programs supporting:
 - Russian civil society, including Russian civil society actors in exile, that monitors and documents human rights and religious freedom violations in Russia; and
 - Independent media that counters Russian disinformation and antisemitism and reports uncensored information about events inside Russia, including those related to religious freedom.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Engage with repressed religious communities in Russia and occupied Ukraine and raise ongoing religious freedom issues through hearings, meetings, letters, congressional delegation trips abroad, and other actions for community representatives to inform the U.S. government and/or public of existing conditions.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Backgrounder: Religious Freedom in Russia and Regions under Russian Occupation
- Podcast: Implications of Russia’s Invasion of Ukraine: The Religious Regulation Framework
- Press Statement: USCIRF Welcomes European Court Judgment against Russia on Jehovah’s Witnesses
- Podcast: Russia’s Religious Freedom Violations in Ukraine
- Press Statement: USCIRF Welcomes Release of Religious Prisoner of Conscience Dennis Christensen

Background

According to a 2020 poll, 63 percent of Russia's population identify as Orthodox Christian, seven percent as Muslim, and 26 percent as having no religious faith. Less than one percent belong to other various communities, including Protestants, Catholics, Jehovah's Witnesses, Buddhists, Jews, Hindus, Baha'is, Falun Gong practitioners, Scientologists, and followers of indigenous religions. Russian law considers Christianity, Islam, Judaism, and Buddhism as "traditional" religions and grants special recognition and privileges to the Russian Orthodox Church.

In 2022, Russia enacted legislation that threatened to further curtail religious freedom by expanding already broad, vague terms such as "extremism," "propaganda," and "foreign influence." In July, President Vladimir Putin signed amendments to the country's extremism law that created a database of "extremist materials" and a unified register of individuals involved in "extremist" or "terrorist" activities. In December, a new version of the country's foreign agents law went into effect permitting authorities to label individuals considered to be under "foreign influence" as agents of another country. That same month, Putin signed into law a bill punishing anyone who promotes "LGBT [lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender] propaganda" and another bill banning rallies and demonstrations in proximity to certain places, including churches and religious sites. Russia's widening crackdown on civil society following its invasion of Ukraine led the United Nations Human Rights Council (UNHRC) to adopt a resolution in October appointing a special rapporteur to monitor human rights in Russia.

"Extremism" and "Nontraditional" Religious Groups

In 2022, Russian authorities sentenced more than 40 Jehovah's Witnesses to prison time for peaceful religious activities portrayed as "extremist." In September, a court in Gukovo sentenced four Jehovah's Witnesses to seven years in prison and another two Jehovah's Witnesses to six and a half years for praying and singing hymns. All six had been in pretrial detention since August 2020. In November, a court fined Jehovah's Witness Igor Gusev $9,921 (600,000 rubles) for discussing the Bible. In October, a court in occupied Crimea sentenced three Jehovah's Witnesses to six years in prison for holding religious services. In May, Dennis Christensen was released from prison and deported to Denmark after completing his six-year sentence.

In August, six Muslims accused of teaching and discussing the works of Said Nursi had their first hearing in Moscow. They were initially detained in October 2021 and charged with extremism. Authorities opened cases or started trials against several other Muslims in Dagestan and Tatarstan on similar Nursi-related allegations. In March, an appeals court in Omsk sentenced one Tablighi Jamaat member to two years in prison and another two to suspended sentences for giving sermons and spreading Tablighi Jamaat teachings.

Muslims Accused of Terrorism

Muslims accused of involvement in HT face decades in prison, despite no evidence of defendants advocating for or participating in violence.

In November, a military court sentenced four Muslims from Kazan to between 11 and 18 years in prison reportedly related to their talking about religion and holding meetings, holidays, and tea parties after Friday prayers. In Crimea, Russian authorities often use terrorism allegations connected to religious identity to suppress predominantly Muslim Crimean Tatar civil activists opposed to their rule. In March, a military court in Rostov-on-Don sentenced five Crimean Tatars to between 15 and 19 years in prison for alleged HT activities. More than a dozen other activists originally arrested alongside the five in March 2019 were also sentenced in 2022 to prison terms ranging from 12 to 15 years. In July, three lawyers known for defending Crimean Tatars were disbarred in retaliation for their work. Imprisoned Crimean Tatars reported medical neglect, being served food violating their religious dietary requirements, and inhumane living conditions, including rat-infested cells and a lack of access to beds, clean water, and sanitary toilet facilities.

Russia's Invasion of Ukraine

In October, a UNHRC commission determined that Russia had committed war crimes in Ukraine, including summary executions, torture, and rape. Religious communities in Ukraine experienced these and other human rights violations, with Russian forces targeting religious leaders, religious buildings, and other sites of religious or spiritual importance. In March, Russian soldiers in Kherson reportedly beat, strangled, and sexually assaulted an Orthodox Church of Ukraine priest until he agreed to cooperate with them. In November, Russian forces reportedly abducted, tortured, and killed an Evangelical deacon and his son. In June, Russian artillery struck the Svyatohirsk Lavra monastery complex in the region of Donetsk, killing two monks and a nun. That same month, Russian forces reportedly destroyed a mosque while assaulting Severodonetsk, killing 20 people seeking shelter in it.

Key U.S. Policy

U.S.-Russian relations nosedived as the United States rallied the international community against Russia for its invasion of Ukraine. The United States imposed several rounds of sanctions targeting Russia's financial, defense, shipping, and technology sectors as well as Russian government and military officials involved in the war and human rights violations in Ukraine, including President Putin. In September, the U.S. Department of the Treasury sanctioned individuals operating as Russia's occupation authorities in Crimea for specifically targeting religious and ethnic minorities. Following U.S. measures, Russia sanctioned and barred entry to several U.S. government officials, including USCIRF Commissioners. In April, President Joseph R. Biden signed into law legislation suspending trade relations with Russia and banning the importation of Russian oil. On November 30, the U.S. Department of State redesignated Russia as a CPC under IRFA and reimposed as the relevant presidential action existing ongoing sanctions issued for individuals identified pursuant to the Russia and Moldova Jackson-Vanik Repeal and Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act of 2012 and the Support for the Sovereignty, Integrity, Democracy, and Economic Stability of Ukraine Act of 2014, as amended.

SAUDI ARABIA

USCIRF–RECOMMENDED FOR COUNTRIES OF PARTICULAR CONCERN (CPC)

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Saudi Arabia remained poor despite some nominal improvements. The Saudi government continued to systematically deny non-Muslims the ability to build houses of worship or worship in public. According to the 1992 Saudi Basic Law of Governance, the constitution is the Qur'an and the sunna (traditions of the Prophet). The judicial system is largely governed by a Saudi interpretation of Shari'a as informed by Hanbali jurisprudence. Apostasy (including conversion away from Islam) and blasphemy are both crimes carrying the potential for a death sentence, though blasphemy is more often punished through prison sentences, fines, and lashings, and no executions on either charge have taken place in recent years.

Power in Saudi Arabia is highly centralized within the Al Saud ruling family. The ruling monarch, King Salman bin Abdel Aziz Al Saud, holds the title "Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques." In September, King Salman bin Abdelaziz appointed his son Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman as prime minister, further centralizing the family's power. Crown Prince Mohammed has systematically cracked down on both religious and political dissent despite overseeing economic reforms associated with Saudi Vision 2030. Saudi law is largely uncodified, but in 2022 the government made progress toward digital procedures for the law of evidence and a written penal code, both of which could reduce the risk of arbitrary and inconsistent sentencing of religious dissidents and enhance accountability within the Saudi judicial system.

Shi'a Muslims also faced ongoing discrimination in housing, employment, and the judiciary, and they remained without access to senior positions in the government and military. The government continued to prosecute, jail, sentence, and execute Shi'a Muslims involved in protests in 2011 against discrimination on the basis of their religious identity. While some were released in 2022, many of those charged and sentenced were minors when they are alleged to have committed their crimes. In March, Saudi Arabia carried out its largest known mass execution, killing 81 people, including 41 Shi'a Muslims who participated in the 2011 protests. The head of the Committee for the Promotion of Virtue and Prevention of Vice commented on the executions, saying that "one of the most legitimate actions is to preserve religion . . . and one of the ways to achieve that is to eliminate violators and eradicate them."

The Saudi leadership's continued centralization of governance has sidelined the country's religious establishment but has not eliminated state-imposed religious interpretations that restrict freedom of religion or belief. The government took steps to increase its control of the judiciary by arresting sitting judges and appointing new ones, potentially impacting ongoing legal cases against religious minorities and dissenters. Beginning in the summer of 2022, Saudi courts began issuing egregiously long prison sentences against dissidents—including religious dissidents—who peacefully expressed their beliefs. Several detained prisoners of conscience had their sentences extended arbitrarily and for excessively long lengths of time. In April, the Saudi government made preparations to deport four Uyghur Muslims to China but delayed the deportation following international pressure.

Saudi women have benefited from recent legal reforms but continue to face restrictions on their religious freedom. The March 2022 Saudi Personal Status Law standardizes in writing laws that were previously subject to the discretion of Saudi officials and ensures certain protections for women's consent to marriage. At the same time, it codifies systematic religious freedom restrictions affecting women, including the male guardianship system and a legal prohibition on Muslim women marrying non-Muslim men. Saudi women who have protested the guardianship system began receiving appallingly long prison sentences in 2022. In August, the Saudi Specialized Criminal Court (SCC) sentenced Salma al-Shehab to 34 years in prison and an additional 34-year travel ban over her tweets supporting women activists advocating for guardianship system reform.

The Saudi government also continued to restrict the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and intersex (LGBTQI+) community's freedom of religion or belief. Same-sex relations are punishable by death based on the government's interpretation of religion, though the government has not executed anyone on these grounds in recent years.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Saudi Arabia as a "country of particular concern," or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA), and lift the waiver releasing the administration from taking otherwise legislatively mandated action as a result of the designation; and
- Explore legal options for penalizing U.S. companies complicit in the Saudi government's religious freedom violations, including those enabling the electronic surveillance of the cellular phones, emails, social media accounts, and private messages of religious minorities and religious dissidents.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Hold public hearings to amplify congressional concerns over religious freedom violations in Saudi Arabia, including the prolonged detention of religious prisoners of conscience, and work with like-minded parliamentarians in other countries to advocate for them and other prisoners of conscience to be released; and

- Convey publicly to the administration bipartisan concern over religious freedom violations in Saudi Arabia.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom Conditions in Saudi Arabia

Background

Out of 34 million Saudis, 85–90 percent are Sunni Muslim and 10–15 percent are Shi'a Muslim. The United Nations (UN) estimates that 38 percent of the population are expatriates, including at least two million Christians, Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs, practitioners of folk religions, and the unaffiliated. Non-Muslim citizens gather for religious purposes in private and often hide their identity to avoid harsh social and official consequences. The government has also been increasingly tolerant of practices with non-Muslim religious origins like yoga, Halloween costumes, and Christmas decorations.

Muslim Dissidents

In 2022, the Saudi government released two Shi'a Muslims whose death sentences were converted to life sentences in 2021. Authorities released Dawood al-Marhoon in February and Murtaja Qureiris in June, both of whom were minors when they are alleged to have committed crimes. However, in July the SCC sentenced Jalal al-Labbad to death for his participation in 2011 protests despite being a minor at the time. In August, the court also upheld a death sentence against Abdullah al-Derazi, who was a minor when he is alleged to have committed his crimes.

Saudi Arabia also continued to persecute dissident Sunni religious leaders and their families. Malik al-Dowaish, son of imprisoned Sunni religious scholar Suleiman al-Dowaish, was arrested in July after calling for his father's release. In February, the Court of Appeal upheld a two-year prison sentence against Malik's brother Abdulrahman. Malik and his other brother Abdulwahhab (arrested in August 2021) were released in September, but Malik was rearrested later that month. Suleiman al-Dowaish was arrested in 2016 following tweets about a religious sermon he gave in Mecca. Sheikh Salman al-Ouda, arrested in 2017 over his religious beliefs, continues to be detained despite reports in 2021 of his deteriorating health. There are similar health concerns for Mohammad Hassan al-Habib, arrested in July 2016 over the content of his sermons. In October, the SCC again postponed a court hearing for religious scholar Hassan Farhan al-Maliki, arrested in 2017 and charged with calling into question the fundamentals of Islam, among other charges.

Non-Muslim Religious Minorities

Saudi textbooks reflect some improvement regarding the portrayal of non-Muslims, but they still teach that Jewish and Christian holy books were "corrupted" and "distorted" in their interpretation and compare Jews to "donkeys carrying books." During a sermon at the Grand Mosque in Mecca in July, Imam Saleh bin al-Humaid called for bringing "annihilation upon the plundering and occupying Jews."

During the Muslim World League's Forum on Common Values among Religious Followers, held in May, non-Saudi leaders from the Hindu, Buddhist, Christian, Muslim, and Jewish communities came to Saudi Arabia to discuss religious issues, though not issues related to religious freedom in Saudi Arabia itself.

Women and LGBTQI+ People and Religious Freedom

In September, the Public Prosecution and the governor of the Asir region opened an investigation into a violent August raid by security forces on a "social education house" (Dar al-Reaya) for women and girls in Khamis Mushait. Women and girls can be sent to social education houses for religiously grounded violations, including disobedience ('uquq) and running away (taghayyub) from a male guardian's home. During the raid, reportedly in response to protests over the mistreatment of residents at the facility, Saudi security officials assaulted women and girls living at the facility, whipped them with belts and sticks, and dragged them by their hair. During the year, the government continued to detain activists who protested the guardianship system and those who expressed support for them on social media.

Saudi Arabia has jailed members of the LGBTQI+ community on religious grounds and has arrested LGBTQI+ social media influencers on the basis that their content could "negatively impact public morality." Saudi textbooks, while reflecting considerable improvement in other areas, continue to use religion as a basis to claim that fluid gender identity is "among the greatest of sins" that "make one deserving of a curse" and that dressing in the manner of a different gender will be "cursed with expulsion and banishment from the mercy of Allah Almighty."

Key U.S. Policy

The Joseph R. Biden administration has expressed concern over religious freedom conditions in Saudi Arabia but has imposed limited tangible consequences in light of security and economic interests exacerbated by the Russian invasion of Ukraine. In April, President Biden nominated Michael Ratney as U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia, but Ratney was not confirmed by the end of the reporting period. He was renominated in January 2023. In July, President Biden visited Saudi Arabia and met with Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman, where he "underscored" human rights concerns.

U.S. Special Envoy to Monitor and Combat Antisemitism Deborah E. Lipstadt made her first official overseas trip to Saudi Arabia in July to discuss antisemitism with Saudi officials. She indicated an openness to hosting a discussion on "Judeo-Arabic issues" in Saudi Arabia in the future.

On November 30, the U.S. Department of State redesignated Saudi Arabia as a CPC under IRFA but reimposed the longstanding waiver on taking any presidential action as a consequence of the designation.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Syria remained poor amidst the ongoing civil war and continuing political fragmentation, humanitarian crises, and contested governance. The government of President Bashar al-Assad—which controlled two-thirds of Syria’s territory—committed egregious human rights abuses such as arbitrary detention and torture, enforced disappearance and, with its allies, civilian-targeted fatal attacks in opposition- and rebel-held regions. While President Assad appeared in March at a Christian ecclesiastical conference in Damascus, the government’s treatment of other groups such as Druze challenged its claims of protecting religious minorities. In July and December, state security and government-affiliated militias responded with lethal force to Druze communities’ anti-regime protests. The government angered its Alawi Muslim base by releasing hundreds of detained Sunni Muslims—whom it has long deemed militants—during the holy season of Ramadan. Yet, the regime kept at least 136,000 people in arbitrary detention and continued to capitalize on the conflict-fueled sectarianism it helped establish, appropriating Sunni Muslims’ religious authority and stoking Alawis’ fear of Sunnis gaining power.

Nonstate actors, such as Turkish-supported armed opposition groups (TSOs) in the north-central region and former al-Qaeda affiliate and U.S.-designated terrorist group Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham (HTS) in Idlib in the northwest, perpetrated many violations against religious minorities. Emboldened by Turkey’s support and intensifying military action in northern Syria, TSOs continued to target religious minorities, especially Yazidis, for rape, assassination, kidnapping for ransom, confiscation of property, and desecration of cemeteries and places of worship. In June, TSOs desecrated Yazidi graves, and in December, on a Yazidi holy day, the Faylaq al-Sham faction vandalized a cemetery near Afrin. Despite HTS’s robust campaign to distance itself from its past massacres and other crimes against religious minorities, the group’s governance in the northwest advanced a Salafi-Jihadist ideology disenfranchising Christians and Druze. HTS continued to expropriate property, restrict religious rituals, arrest and detain religious minorities and nonconforming Sunni Muslims, and impose religiously justified dress codes on women. The Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS), a longstanding perpetrator of mass atrocities against Syria’s religious minorities, did not regain territory. However, it asserted its presence via a major prison break in Hasaka in January and numerous attacks on civilians and the U.S.-allied Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF). Its morality police (Hisba) used religion to justify killing people accused of prostitution and witchcraft in Deir al-Zor and to extort zakat, or religious alms, from local populations. Turkey, Iran, and Russia contributed to the devastation and displacement of endangered religious minority communities in Syria via direct military actions such as airstrikes, drones, and bombings. In November, Turkey conducted airstrikes in northern Syria and Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan amplified longstanding threats to escalate land operations there, ostensibly in retaliation for a November 13 bombing in Istanbul that Turkey attributed to Syrian-based Kurdish terrorists. The U.S. Department of State acknowledged Turkey’s concerns about terrorism but stressed the need for de-escalation. The Autonomous Administration of North and East Syria (AANES) and its SDF militia—which have helped stabilize religious freedom conditions in parts of northern Syria—expressed concern that Turkey’s threatened military encroachment would prevent the SDF’s ability to secure the region against the threat of ISIS insurgency and the TSOs that have laid waste to religious minority communities. Already displaced within and outside Syria, and vulnerable on the basis of their religious identity, minorities in rebel-held areas face precarious conditions subject to ruin from any additional crisis, such as the massive 2023 earthquakes.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Designate Syria as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in and tolerating systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA), and redesignate HTS as an “entity of particular concern,” or EPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by IRFA;
 - Impose targeted sanctions on additional Syrian government agencies and officials, HTS principals, and the leadership of TSOs responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals’ assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations; and
 - Support religious freedom in north and east Syria by: 1) fully implementing General License No. 22 in areas the AANES governs; 2) encouraging inclusion of the AANES in any U.S.-backed political solution for Syria, pursuant to United Nations (UN) Resolution 2254, including Geneva-based talks to resolve the conflict “as the basis for a Syrian-led and Syrian-owned political transition;” and 3) assisting the efforts of local partners to ascertain the whereabouts of kidnapped and missing Yazidi women and girls.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Raise the profile of Syria’s vulnerable religious minority communities through hearings, meetings, letters, congressional delegation trips abroad, or other actions.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Hearing: Freedom of Religion or Belief in Syria
- Press Statement: USCIRF Welcomes the U.S. Government’s Issuance of a General License Including Northeast Syria
- Podcast: The Suffocating Hold of HTS on Northwest Syria
- Factsheet: Religious Freedom in Syria under Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham \(HTS\)

Background

Article 3 of Syria's constitution states that the president must be Muslim and that Islamic jurisprudence is a major source of legislation. The same article calls for the government to respect all religions, to protect the personal status of religious communities, and to ensure the freedom to practice religious "rituals that do not prejudice public order." The government continued to ban Jehovah's Witnesses, restrict proselytization, and prohibit the conversion of Muslims to other religions.

The demography of Syria reflects over 11 years of war resulting in mass casualties and displacement. Over 87 percent of the almost 21.5 million-person population is Muslim, with 74 percent Sunni Muslims and the remaining 13 percent Shi'a, Alawi, and Ismaili Muslims. Christians—including Syriac-Assyrians, Maronites, Armenians, and other groups—constitute between two and 10 percent of the population, with some humanitarian organizations reporting that war-related displacement and migration has diminished Christian numbers from 1.5 million before 2011 to only 300,000 in 2022. Druze comprise approximately three percent, the Jewish community is now essentially gone, and estimates for Yazidis are obscured by the Syrian government inaccurately classifying them as Muslims.

The war—triggered in 2011 by the government's repression of peaceful protests—has narrowed in territorial scope. Major areas of ongoing conflict include the northern swath encompassing the border with Turkey, Idlib Governorate in the west, the Jazira region in the east, and three Turkish "cantons" including Afrin and those formed by the Euphrates Shield and Peace Spring military operations.

Religious Minorities' Concerns

Throughout the war, Druze communities have avoided countering the Assad regime's portrayal of itself as the protector of religious minorities from militant jihadist groups. However, in July and December, Druze-majority villages in the southern province of Suweida staged large protests expressing long-simmering resentment against the Assad regime, resulting in a government crackdown and fatal clashes with Syrian security forces and affiliated militias. Non-regime-held regions such as Idlib have proven even more inhospitable to Druze. At least 53 kidnapping cases in Druze-majority villages of Idlib Governorate took place between January and August 2022: 23 by HTS, 16 by ISIS, and 14 by other Islamist organizations. Druze in Idlib have expressed concern that despite HTS's public overtures to them, the militant group cannot or will not bring to justice foreign-origin Islamist fighters who target the Druze for violence, as in the case of the murder of an elderly couple in August.

Christians experienced political disenfranchisement as well as violent attacks. In July, an explosion destroyed a Greek Orthodox church during its inauguration in the Hama Governorate, which HTS partially controls. Christian communities in some parts of Idlib approached extinction due to displacement and flight from TSO and HTS harassment and attacks. Those who remain in other villages face HTS and other militant groups' restrictions on their rituals and houses of worship, appropriation of land and other property, kidnappings, and murder.

While the international community took steps toward accountability for Syrian ISIS members who participated in the Yazidi genocide that began in 2014, Yazidis within Syria remain subject to legal discrimination across multiple regions' frameworks of governance, and militant jihadist groups target them for forced conversion, rape and other sexual violence, and murder. The SDF continues to rescue genocide survivors still enslaved within ISIS fighter cells, but in 2022, at least 2,763 Yazidi women and girls kidnapped from Iraq were still missing, many potentially hidden within northeast Syrian camps detaining ISIS fighters and their families.

Religious Freedom Conditions in the North and East

Areas governed by the AANES remained more conducive to religious freedom than government or rebel-held regions. The Kurdish-initiated, ethnically diverse, and multi-confessional administration continued to support pluralistic initiatives. In January, the AANES hosted the International Conference on Mesopotamian Religions and Beliefs, featuring representatives from a variety of religious and political institutions across the Middle East and North Africa and from numerous faiths and ethnic backgrounds. Some Sunni Muslim Arab and Christian residents objected to the AANES's educational reforms, such as bans in October on niqabs in school settings and on Assyrian schools' use of the Syrian government's curriculum over that of the AANES. Overall, however, the AANES's stabilization of the region for religious minorities contrasted favorably with the violence and displacement advanced by TSOs and the Turkish military.

Key U.S. Policy

U.S.-Syria relations have been strained for several decades, and since 1979, the United States has named Syria on its list of state sponsors of terrorism. Over the course of the present civil war, the United States has introduced several sanctions on Syria and related individual actors, pursuant to the Caesar Civilian Protection Act of 2019 and various executive orders. In May, the U.S. Department of the Treasury announced the release of a general license authorizing wider forms of private economic activity in certain non-regime-held areas, including—and as recommended by USCIRF since 2021—those within the AANES, a region uniquely supportive of religious freedom.

In May and September, the State Department announced $808 million and $756 million, respectively, in additional humanitarian assistance to Syria, making the United States the largest humanitarian donor since the beginning of the conflict.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Tajikistan remained dire. The Tajik government continued to severely repress the country's Muslim majority. Children under the age of 18 are barred from visiting mosques and all other public religious activities except for funerals. Private religious education is banned, and children are only allowed to receive religious instruction from their parents at home. Since 2014, the government has appointed all imams, required them to wear state-issued religious garments, and strictly dictated their sermons. People under the age of 35 are not allowed to perform the Hajj.

The government enforced restrictions on how Muslims mourn the dead, including a ban on wearing black clothes. In June, police stopped a woman wearing a black dress to mourn the death of her son and detained her for seven hours at a police station, where she was beaten to the point of unconsciousness. After her family saw her injuries and complained to the police, they were threatened with 15 days of jail time. In addition, police sometimes harassed individuals wearing hijabs or beards as a symbol of Islamic piety and blocked them from entering government buildings.

In 2022, the Tajik government implemented new methods of persecution specifically aimed at the country's minority Ismaili Shi'a Muslim population, including the imprisonment of a prominent religious leader, closure of a religious school and other community activities, and shuttering of religious bookstores that sold Ismaili literature and other materials.

In Tajikistan, the government punished alleged extremism and terrorism without requiring acts that involved violence or incitement of imminent violence. Charges are often arbitrarily issued against religious individuals and their trials lacked due process and procedural safeguards. The Tajik government continued to imprison multiple individuals on lengthy prison sentences for peacefully expressing their faith, including those who veered from the state-scripted sermons, preached without an official appointment by the government, provided religious education, or attempted to share their faith publicly. In August, Ismaili Muslim cleric Muzaffar Davlatmirov was sentenced to five years in prison on "extremism" charges after officiating funeral services for protesters killed by the government. The Tajik government continued to target anyone with ties to the Islamic Renaissance Party of Tajikistan (IRPT), a moderate Islamic political party banned in Tajikistan since 2015, including through the use of transnational repression and requests for extradition from other countries. One of the founders of the IRPT, 80-year-old Zubaydullo Rozik, was placed in special punishment cells twice over the past year for teaching religion to other prisoners, which is illegal in Tajik prisons.

The government continued to require the registration of all religious communities. Unregistered religious communities cannot legally convene religious meetings or assemblies, own or use property for religious purposes, produce or import religious literature, receive donations, carry out charitable work, or invite foreign persons to participate in religious activities. In May, government officials told Protestant Christian leaders that the government would not register any new churches. Like the restrictions placed on Muslims, children of Christian families cannot attend church or other related activities such as religious camps. In August, the government demanded that all non-Muslim communities fill out questionnaires detailing information about the community's employees and their families and any financial contributions the community receives. In September, the United Nations Human Rights Committee (UNHRCtee) determined that Tajikistan's refusal to register Jehovah's Witnesses violated Articles 18(1) and 18(3) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which guarantee protections for the right to freedom of religion or belief.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Tajikistan as a "country of particular concern," or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA), and lift the waiver releasing the administration from taking otherwise legislatively mandated action as a result of the designation;
- Condition U.S. security assistance to the Tajik government on 1) reform of the 2009 religion law and the improvement of conditions for freedom of religion or belief, and 2) mandated religious freedom training for Tajik officials, including education about the benefits of religious freedom for countering and preventing violent extremism;
- Impose targeted sanctions on Tajik government agencies and officials responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals' assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations; and
- Press the Tajik government at the highest levels to identify and immediately release individuals imprisoned in Tajikistan for their peaceful religious activities or religious affiliations; account for the whereabouts of all prisoners of conscience, including those imprisoned on religious grounds; and allow international observers to monitor conditions in Tajik prisons.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom in Tajikistan
- Press Statement: USCIRF Vice Chair Nury Turkel Calls on Tajikistan to Release Shamil Khakimov
- Podcast: The Persecution of Muslims in Tajikistan

Background

President Emomali Rahmon has ruled Tajikistan since 1992, centering power in the hands of his family. Tajikistan faced multiple crises in 2022, including increased economic hardship due to Russia's invasion of Ukraine, ongoing security challenges from Islamic State-Khorasan Province (ISIS-K) in neighboring Afghanistan, increased drug trafficking along the Tajik-Afghan border, and the continuation of the Tajik-Kyrgyz border conflict throughout the year.

The country's population is predominantly Muslim, with around 86 percent adhering to the Hanafi school of Sunni Islam and approximately four percent identifying as Ismaili Shi'a, a group that primarily resides in the mountainous eastern part of the country known as the Gorno Badakhshan Autonomous Oblast (GBAO). The largest Christian group is Russian Orthodox, but other Christian communities include Protestants, Roman Catholics, and Jehovah's Witnesses. Jews, Baha'is, and Zoroastrians also make up small communities.

UN Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders Mary Lawlor conducted a two-week-long official visit to Tajikistan in November and December but was denied access to the GBAO. Lawlor concluded that the situation for human rights defenders, including those working on behalf of religious freedom, is deteriorating as they face "harassment, threats, criminalization, closed unfair trials, and imprisonment."

Legal Framework for Controlling Religion

Tajikistan's legal environment for freedom of religion or belief sharply declined after the adoption of several highly restrictive laws beginning in 2009. Its Law on Freedom of Conscience and Religious Unions requires religious organizations to complete burdensome registration applications to operate legally. Applicants must secure an attestation from local government officials confirming that at least 10 persons over 18 years old in their locality are members. Applicants must then submit detailed information to the government's Committee on Religion, Regulation of Traditions, Celebrations, and Ceremonies, including the organization's planned activities, founders and structure, and basic tenets and attitudes toward education, family, marriage, and health. The government exercises broad discretion to deny applications and strip religious organizations of their registration. The administrative and penal codes provide for large fines and prison terms for religion-related charges such as organizing or participating in "unapproved" religious meetings.

Tajikistan maintains additional legal barriers severely curtailing the right to freedom of religion or belief. The Law on Parental Responsibility bans minors from any organized religious activities except funerals. The Law on Military Duty and Service provides for mandatory military service with no exemption for conscientious objectors. Conscripts must either serve two years in the armed services or pay a substantial fine and take a month-long course in military preparedness.

The GBAO and Repression of Ismaili Shi'as

In 2022, the Tajik government increasingly repressed the country's Ismaili Shi'a population, who are primarily ethnic Pamiris located in the GBAO. Authorities cracked down on civil society in the GBAO following protests in mid-May over the government's decision not to investigate the death of an activist in police custody. The government arrested over 200 people, imprisoned Pamiri journalists and repatriated them from Russia, and began country-wide suppression of Pamiris that included repression of their freedom of religion or belief.

In May in the capital Dushanbe, authorities began pressuring staff at the Ismaili tariqa (school), officially registered with the government since 2012, to cease all religious and secular educational activities. In September, the government forcibly closed the school along with all the bookstores in Dushanbe selling religious literature. Islamic religious studies are now only taught in one school that remains open in the capital. In addition, authorities shut down development projects funded and created by the Ismaili religious leader, Europe-based Aga Khan, including schools, summer camps for children, banks, and telecommunications.

Religious Prisoners of Conscience

In August, Ismaili Muslim cleric Muzaffar Davlatmirov received a five-year prison sentence on "extremism" charges. Following the government's violent crackdown in the GBAO, Davlatmirov gave sermons calling on people to remain peaceful but also criticized the authorities' use of force. After authorities killed three local informal leaders in the May protests, Davlatmirov led their religious services and gave janaza (funeral) prayers. The secret police arrested him on July 26 and sentenced him in private court proceedings only eight days later.

Since February 2019, Jehovah's Witness Shamil Khakimov has been in prison for "inciting religious hatred." Tajik authorities targeted the nonviolent 71-year-old for sharing his faith in public and have denied him access to adequate medical care. In November 2022, the Khujand City Court rejected Khakimov's request for transfer to a specialized hospital to treat signs of gangrene in his legs and poor eyesight, again disregarding UNHRCtee requests for Khakimov to receive proper medical treatment.

Key U.S. Policy

In February, the United States and Tajikistan celebrated 30 years of diplomatic relations. Since recognizing Tajikistan's independence in 1991, the U.S. government has provided over $1.8 billion in assistance to promote economic development, education, and health as well as regional security, including joint military exercises and $330 million in security assistance to combat terrorism and narco-trafficking. The U.S. government has pledged an additional $60 million in security assistance over the next two years. In May, Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asian Affairs Donald Lu visited Tajikistan to discuss bilateral cooperation on economic and security issues.

On November 30, the U.S. Department of State redesignated Tajikistan as a CPC under IRFA, although it also maintained a waiver on imposing any related sanctions on the country "as required in the important national interest of the United States." It has designated Tajikistan as a CPC each year since 2016.

TURKMENISTAN

USCIRF-RECOMMENDED FOR COUNTRIES OF PARTICULAR CONCERN (CPC)

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Turkmenistan remained poor. The government controls all aspects of religious life and expression, dictating and surveilling religious practice and punishing nonconformity through administrative harassment, imprisonment, and torture.

The government of Turkmenistan is an extremely authoritarian regime with an abysmal record on human rights and freedom of the press. As a result, the country is largely closed off from the rest of the world, making it difficult for accurate information to flow into or out of its borders. The government's tight hold on society and information also makes it difficult to document the full scope of the ongoing religious freedom violations, which are certainly more extensive than the limited number of reports indicate. In addition to the closed-off nature of the country, those who can get information out often do so at great risk to their lives and liberty. Turkmenistan's diaspora community and citizens in exile are often unwilling to share information about the government's religious freedom violations for fear of retaliation against them or their families. Nevertheless, the available information continues to present a bleak picture.

During the year, the government continued to treat all independent religious activity with suspicion, maintaining a large surveillance apparatus that monitors believers at home and abroad. Turkmen law requires religious groups to register under intrusive criteria, strictly controls registered groups' activities, and punishes religious activities by unregistered groups, which are banned.

Persons accused of criminal religious offenses are often tried in closed-regime courts where sentences remain secret. Prisoners of conscience are often disappeared in the state's prison system and presumed to be held without contact with the outside world. The authorities hold many religious prisoners at the notorious Ovadan-Depe Prison, located in the remote desert 50 miles north of the capital city of Ashgabat. Ovadan-Depe was built to house high-level political dissidents and enemies of the state, and its prisoners routinely die from harsh conditions that include torture and starvation. In October, five Muslims who are serving 12-year prison sentences for meeting to study the writings of Turkish Muslim theologian Said Nursi were transferred to a strict-regime labor camp.

Turkmenistan maintains its compulsory two-year military service requirement, described as a "sacred duty" in Turkmenistan's constitution, and does not offer alternative civilian service for conscientious objectors. As USCIRF's past reporting shows, Jehovah's Witnesses have been imprisoned under Turkmenistan's criminal code for conscientious objection. Although all those imprisoned were granted amnesty in 2021, the government conscription office continued to summon Jehovah's Witnesses for compulsory military service in 2022. In March, the United Nations Human Rights Committee found that Turkmenistan violated Articles 9(1) and 18(1) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights by imprisoning a Jehovah's Witness for his conscientious objection to compulsory military service.

Online activity remained limited by blocked internet access and extremely slow network speeds. In January, then President Gurbanguly Berdimuhamedow instructed the head of the Ministry for State Security to further increase state control of the internet and restrict public access to internet sources that "threaten the constitutional order." In March, then President Berdimuhamedow ostensibly handed government leadership over to his son Serdar in managed "elections" while giving himself the position of speaker of the Senate. This transition did not bring any improvements in conditions for human rights and individual freedoms; if anything, they worsened. Throughout the year, Gurbanguly remained active in government leadership, and in January 2023 he was appointed "national leader," making clear he still controlled the Turkmen government.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Redesignate Turkmenistan as a "country of particular concern," or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA), and lift the waiver releasing the administration from taking otherwise legislatively mandated action as a result of the designation;
- Take presidential action to limit security assistance to Turkmenistan under IRFA Section 405\(a\)\(22\) to hold the government of Turkmenistan accountable for its particularly severe violations of religious freedom;
- Impose targeted sanctions on Turkmenistan government agencies and officials responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals' assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations; and
- Urge the government of Turkmenistan to provide an acceptable civilian alternative to military service.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Podcast: Turkmenistan's Tight Grip on Religious Freedom

Background

Turkmenistan is a highly repressive country ruled since 2007 by Gurbanguly Berdimuhamedow, who enforces a cult of personality that proliferates his image in golden monuments and fawning official coverage. During 2022, the year his son Serdar nominally took over as the country's president, space for civil society continued to shrink, most directly affecting women and internet users. Women were banned from sitting in the front seat of cars and were required to adhere to strict dress codes, though enforcement did weaken during the year. Internet access and government censorship of information continued to worsen with the government's increased curtailing of VPNs and incredibly slow broadband, earning Turkmenistan's mobile and fixed broadband speeds a ranking of 177th out of 179 countries as of January 2023.

Turkmenistan holds the fourth-largest natural gas reserves in the world, which is vital to its geopolitical relations with Russia, China, Iran, and potentially Europe. Following Russia's 2022 invasion of Ukraine, European Union countries have sought new sources of natural gas to decrease their dependence on Russia, including from Turkmenistan.

The majority of the population is Sunni Muslim, at 89 percent, while approximately nine percent of the population is Eastern Orthodox, typically Russian Orthodox or Armenian Apostolic. There are small communities of Shi'a Muslims, Roman Catholics, Protestant Christians, and Baha'is.

Legal Framework for Controlling Religious Activity

Although Turkmenistan's 2016 religion law asserts that the country is a secular state with religious freedom, it requires all religious activity to be registered with the state under intrusive criteria, mandates that the government be informed of all foreign financial support, bans private religious education and worship, and prohibits the public wearing of religious garb except by clerics. The State Commission on Religious Organizations and Expert Evaluation of Religious Information Resources (SCROEERIR) oversees all religious activity, including registrations, the appointment of religious leaders, the building of houses of worship, and the import and publication of religious literature.

Registration of Religious Organizations

Turkmen law requires all religious organizations to register with the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) by sending applications to SCROEERIR to operate legally. The process is burdensome and designed to allow for significant government interference in the functioning of religious organizations. The MOJ will register an organization only if SCROEERIR has endorsed the application and the organization's goals or activities do not "contradict Turkmenistan's constitution," giving the government latitude to arbitrarily deny registration applications. SCROEERIR must approve all individuals appointed as leaders of religious organizations, each of whom under law must have "appropriate religious education." In addition, the process requires religious organizations to provide detailed information about founding members, including names, addresses, and birth dates. Recognized communities must reregister every three years.

Even if successfully registered, religious organizations enjoy little legal protection. If a court finds that a religious organization is violating Turkmenistan's constitution, it may suspend the group's activities. The law further provides that MOJ officials may attend any religious event held by a registered organization and question its leaders about the organization's activities. Registered organizations may import religious literature only with SCROEERIR approval.

Unregistered religious organizations are forbidden from conducting religious activities, producing or disseminating religious materials, proselytizing, and gathering for religious services, even in private residences. Reports indicate that registering churches is very difficult and that Turkmenistan's Christian minority has been largely driven underground. Although not technically banned, Jehovah's Witnesses have not been granted registration and are therefore unable to operate legally. Religious activity is forbidden in prisons and in the military.

Key U.S. Policy

The United States engaged with the government of Turkmenistan on a variety of issues such as border and regional security programs, efforts to mitigate climate change, trade, and educational and cultural exchanges; U.S. foreign assistance served to reinforce these objectives. Turkmenistan also enjoys most-favored-nation trading status.

In September, the commander of the Montana National Guard traveled to Turkmenistan for talks on reviving the state partnership program facilitating collaborative military trainings between the United States and Turkmenistan. In November, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asian Affairs Donald Lu traveled to Turkmenistan to discuss cooperation on a wide range of bilateral and regional issues.

On November 30, the U.S. Department of State redesignated Turkmenistan as a CPC under IRFA but kept in place a waiver of the sanctions that should accompany the designation based on the "important national interest of the United States," as it has done since 2014. The waiver effectively neutralizes the consequences of Turkmenistan's CPC designation, removes any incentive for the government to reform its brutal policies, and lends credence to the regime's claims that security concerns warrant its harsh repression of religious freedom.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Vietnam worsened. Authorities intensified their control and persecution of religious groups—especially unregistered, independent communities, including Montagnard and Hmong Protestants, Cao Dai followers, Hoa Hao Buddhists, and Unified Buddhists, as well as other unrecognized movements such as Duong Van Minh and Falun Gong. Even members of state-controlled religious groups experienced persecution. During the year, authorities harassed and persecuted some independent groups, particularly Montagnard Protestants and Cao Dai, for observing International Human Rights Day and International Day Commemorating the Victims of Acts of Violence Based on Religion or Belief. The 2018 Law on Belief and Religion (LBR) remained restrictive, and groups encountered challenges with registration due to the law’s uneven and inconsistent application throughout the country, contravening international standards. In June, the government introduced two repressive draft decrees to implement the LBR, which, if passed, could further restrict religious freedom in Vietnam.

USCIRF received many reports of local authorities harassing members of unregistered Montagnard Protestant groups, disrupting and banning their peaceful religious activities, interrogating and threatening them with imprisonment, imposing heavy fines, and coercing them to denounce and leave their denominations and instead join state-controlled Protestant organizations. During the year, some unregistered Montagnard Protestant churches in Cu Mgar district of Dak Lak Province requested guidance from their commune governments on lawfully conducting religious activities; they also requested the implementation of Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), to which Vietnam is a party. In response, authorities detained, interrogated, fined, and threatened the Montagnards with imprisonment.

There was a significant increase in the number of reported incidents of local authorities coercing Hmong Christian converts to publicly renounce their faith, including some who attended state-controlled Protestant churches. Those who refused to comply faced threats and physical assaults, hefty fines, dispossession of properties that threaten their livelihood, denial of important identification documents and birth certificates that render them effectively stateless, and banishment from families and local Hmong communities.

Meanwhile, harassment of Catholic communities also increased. In February, officials from Vu Ban, Hoa Binh Province, disrupted a Mass celebrated by Archbishop Joseph Vu Van Thien of Hanoi and other priests. The Hanoi Archdiocese delivered a formal letter of complaint to the provincial government, protesting the local authorities’ frequent harassment and urging them to respect the religious freedom of Catholics in that province. Additionally, land disputes between Catholics and local governments persisted.

Working with state-controlled Cao Dai groups, local authorities disrupted and banned home-based independent Cao Dai religious activities and observance of important rituals, demanding that adherents obtain approval for such activities and join the state-controlled organization. Authorities in An Giang and Dong Thap provinces similarly prevented or disrupted home-based religious activities of independent Hoa Hao Buddhists.

Authorities harassed members of the independent Unified Buddhist Church of Vietnam (UBCV). In December, local authorities in Ngoc Hoi district, Kon Tum Province, destroyed a UBCV pagoda, reportedly in retaliation against its abbot’s refusal to join the state-controlled Buddhist church. Moreover, local authorities threatened to demolish a religious hall built by Khmer-Krom Theravada Buddhists in Loan My Village, Vinh Long Province.

Authorities also continued persecution of other religious movements—including Duong Van Minh, Falun Gong, Ha Mon, the Jesus Church, Peng Lei Buddhists, the World Mission Society Church of God, and Yiguandao—characterizing many of them as “false” or “evil” religions and vowing to eradicate them. In May, the Hanoi Government Committee for Religious Affairs stated that such groups are ineligible for registering religious activities with the government.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Designate Vietnam as a “country of particular concern,” or CPC, for engaging in systematic, ongoing, and egregious violations of religious freedom, as defined by the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA), and enter into a new binding agreement with the government to address worsening religious freedom conditions;
 - Engage with the Vietnamese government and relevant academic and civil society stakeholders to encourage amendments to the 2018 LBR and the two 2022 draft implementing decrees to conform to international standards, including by making registration simpler and optional;
 - Hold Vietnam accountable for religious freedom violations as a member of the United Nations Human Rights Council (UNHRC) and press Vietnam to allow relevant United Nations (UN) Special Procedures unfettered access to the country to monitor and investigate religious freedom and other human rights violations; and
 - Direct the U.S. Mission in Vietnam to highlight and monitor the conditions of religious prisoners of conscience and to advocate for their wellbeing in prison and release.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Support legislative efforts to improve religious freedom in Vietnam, including by reintroducing the Vietnam Human Rights Act (H.R.3001).

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom in Vietnam in 2021
- Factsheet: Overview of Refugees Fleeing Religious Persecution Globally

Background

Vietnam is a religiously diverse country with related demographics varying greatly across research studies and reports. Religious traditions with a significant presence in the country include Buddhism, Hoa Hao Buddhism, Cao Dai, Catholicism, and Protestantism. As of December, the government had officially recognized a total of 16 religions and 43 religious organizations. Many groups, however, refused to register for fear of persecution or concern over their independence, which has led state-controlled and independent religious groups to compete for representation.

Vietnam's constitution states that citizens "can follow any religion or follow none" and that "all religions are equal before the law." The constitution also mandates respect and protection for freedom of belief and religion. However, it allows authorities to restrict human rights, including religious freedom, for reasons of "national defense, national security, social order and security, social morality, and community well-being." Vietnam's 2018 LBR contains similar provisions permitting restrictions on the right to religious freedom.

Legal and Policy Developments

In June, the government introduced two draft decrees to implement the LBR, one of which would replace the current implementing Decree 162/2017/ND-CP and increase control and suppression of registered religious activities. In addition, the punishment decree would impose harsh administrative punishments—including heavy fines, suspension of religious activities, and forced dissolution of religious organizations—on groups for vaguely and broadly defined "violations." The Vietnamese Communist Party's Vietnam Fatherland Front and the Government Committee for Religious Affairs (GCRA) organized consultation sessions and conferences on the draft decrees. Experts warned that if passed in their current form, the two decrees could further restrict religious freedom in Vietnam.

Religious Prisoners of Conscience and Prison Conditions

Conditions for religious prisoners of conscience remained dire in 2022. For example, renowned religious freedom advocate and Hoa Hao Buddhist Nguyen Bac Truyen remained in prison, serving an 11-year sentence while suffering from heart, liver, and other health conditions. Authorities transferred him to Gia Trung prison in Gia Lai Province, where he was reportedly subjected to forced labor. Phan Van Thu, founder of the An Dan Dai Dao Buddhist group, died while serving a life sentence in prison after reportedly succumbing to an unspecified medical issue in November. In May, court authorities in Dak Lak Province sentenced Montagnard Protestant Y Wo Nie to four years' imprisonment for reporting religious persecution to international organizations. Furthermore, despite the government's announcement in April that it would deliver religious books to 54 prisons, former prisoners reported that access to religious scriptures—especially those in ethnic minority languages—remained severely lacking. They also reported poor prison conditions and that prison authorities often banned religious practices such as public or group prayers.

International Accountability

In October, Vietnam was elected to a three-year term (2023–2025) as a member on the UNHRC, despite widespread and deep concerns over the country's human rights record. The Unrepresented Nations and Peoples Organization expressed concern over Vietnam's UNHRC candidacy due to the country's systematic violation of the rights of its citizens—particularly indigenous peoples—including its religious freedom violations through enforcement of the LBR. Four prominent international human rights groups, including Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International, voiced concerns about the country's human rights situation and called on the government to "ensure compliance with obligations under the ICCPR and other international human rights law" in accordance with its pledges. They also called on Vietnam to invite all UN special procedures and allow them "full and unfettered access to the country" to monitor human rights situations. Also in October, following that UNHRC election, six UNHRC special rapporteurs, including the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief and the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples, sent a Joint Allegation Letter (JAL) to the Vietnamese government concerning its human rights violations. The JAL raised specific concerns over the LBR's restrictions on religious freedom that affected independent, unregistered religious groups, including Khmer-Krom Theravada Buddhists.

Key U.S. Policy

In 2022, officials with the administration of President Joseph R. Biden, including Secretary of the State Antony J. Blinken and Deputy Secretary of State Wendy R. Sherman, raised Vietnam's human rights issues and its international human rights obligations with their Vietnamese counterparts. Marking the International Day Commemorating the Victims of Acts of Violence Based on Religion or Belief on August 22, the U.S. Embassy and six other Western embassies in Vietnam issued a joint statement condemning "continuing acts of violence targeting individuals, including those belonging to religious minorities, on the basis of religion or belief." The 26th U.S.-Vietnam Human Rights Dialogue convened in Hanoi in November, during which U.S. Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom Rashad Hussain raised religious freedom concerns. In May, Representative Zoe Lofgren (D-CA), Representative Chris Smith (R-NJ), and other members of the House of Representatives sent a letter to President Biden, urging him to raise religious freedom and other human rights concerns with Vietnam's Prime Minister Pham Minh Chinh during the U.S.-Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Summit.

On November 30, the U.S. Department of State placed Vietnam on its Special Watch List for severe violations of religious freedom. While USCIRF has recommended Vietnam's designation as a CPC every year since 2002—finding that despite some notable areas of improvement, "systematic, ongoing, and egregious" violations of religious freedom within the meaning of IRFA persist—the State Department had previously designated it as a CPC only in 2004 and 2005.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Algeria remained poor. Since beginning its campaign to forcibly close Evangelical churches in 2017, the Algerian government has failed to show meaningful commitment to improving religious freedom conditions over the last five years. Government authorities continued to forcibly close churches and prosecute members of Muslim and non-Muslim minority communities on charges of blasphemy, proselytization, and unauthorized worship. The Algerian government also continued to deny several religious minority groups the registration required to worship collectively, including the Evangelical Protestant Association (EPA) and the Ahmadiyya Muslim community.

Algerian law regulates the manifestation of religion or belief through several legal mechanisms, including the Algerian Penal Code and Ordinance 06-03 on the regulation of non-Muslim organizations. Some of these provisions, including laws penalizing blasphemy, proselytization, and unregistered religious activity—all subject to imprisonment and fines—are inconsistent with international legal protections for religious freedom.

In 2022, the wali (governor) of Tizi Ouzou commenced proceedings to close at least four churches in that province, bringing the total number of EPA churches closed by the government to 21. Civil society members report that the government has encouraged individual churches to register outside of the EPA umbrella in an attempt to fracture the growing community.

Authorities arrested the EPA's top leader, Pastor Salaheddine Chalah, in November 2021 following the U.S. government's decision to add Algeria to its Special Watch List for engaging in severe religious freedom violations. Other EPA leaders reportedly experienced harassment at the same time, including surveillance and property searches by government officials. In March, a court in Tizi Ouzou convicted Chalah of "practicing worship without the prior (approval) of the National Commission for non-Muslim worship" and "calling through social media for the disobedience of laws by a clergyman," sentencing him to 18 months in prison and a fine of $1,400 (200,00 dinars). The government charged Chalah as a "clergyman" while at the same time refusing to register the EPA as a religious organization, reflecting a biased government double standard specifically against the EPA.

Authorities sentenced Mohamed Derrab, a Christian convert, to 18 months in prison for proselytization while continuing to prosecute Pastor Hamid Boussadi on charges of proselytization and holding worship without permission. In September, the Algerian government requested that Caritas, a nongovernmental development organization affiliated with the Catholic Church, cease operating in the country, reportedly due to its purported foreign influences. In a context where the government has a history of undermining religious freedom and then justifying it as protecting against foreign influence, this development raises red flags for the future.

Several Muslims remain detained on charges of blasphemy, including political opposition members Yacine Mebarki and Walid Kechida and scholar Dr. Said Djabelkhir. According to local media reports, at least one additional unnamed Muslim individual faced blasphemy charges in 2022. In June, a tribunal in Bejaia charged 18 Ahmadiyya Muslims with blasphemy and unauthorized group participation, detaining three members of the group. The judge ordered the immediate detention of three members and released the others pending further investigation. In December, Abdul Ghani became the sixth Ahmadiyya Muslim to be sentenced to a multiyear prison sentence, with the judge accusing the Ahmadiyya Muslim community of being a "threat to national security" and a threat to Algeria's traditional Maliki school of thought. Advocates estimate that over 100 Ahmadis are facing prosecution, most of them for "unauthorized worship" in the context of the religious group's unregistered status.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Maintain Algeria on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Enter into an agreement with the Algerian government and provide associated financial and technical support to obligate the Algerian government to take substantial steps to address violations of religious freedom, including but not limited to:
 - Decriminalizing blasphemy and proselytization and releasing those detained on charges of blasphemy and proselytization;
 - Registering the EPA and the Ahmadiyya community as non-Muslim and Muslim religious organizations, respectively;
 - Reopening closed and sealed churches and working in good faith with EPA members to address remaining health and safety code violations; and
 - Direct U.S. Embassy officials to attend and observe court proceedings on blasphemy charges or cases related to houses of worship to emphasize the U.S. government's concerns about such cases.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Continue to raise the implementation of blasphemy laws and closure of houses of worship with the U.S. Department of State and relevant Algerian counterparts to ensure religious freedom concerns are incorporated into the U.S.-Algeria bilateral relationship.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Factsheet: Law and Religion in Algeria
- Podcast: The State of Religious Freedom in Algeria

Background

Algeria is home to nearly 43 million people, 99 percent of whom are estimated to be Sunni Muslim. The remaining one percent of the population comprises Jews, nonbelievers, Muslim minorities (including Ahmadiyya and Shi'a Muslims), and Christians (including Roman Catholics, Seventh-day Adventists, Methodists, Evangelicals, Lutherans, the Reformed Church, and Egyptian Coptic Christians). Algeria's constitution establishes Islam as the official state religion.

Algeria has a long history of repression and persecution of religious minorities, including against Jews, people who practice the Baha'i faith, Protestant Christians, and Ahmadiyya Muslims. Despite Algeria's constitution affording all Algerians the right to freedom of opinion and worship, the Algerian government limits the free expression and practice of belief through the enforcement of laws that favor a particular interpretation of Islam and restrict religious activities. Algeria's penal and information codes criminalize blasphemy, with punishments including imprisonment for up to five years and fines. Algeria's Criminal Code also censors publications by prohibiting content that is "contrary to Islamic morals."

Through Ordinance 06-03, passed in 2006, the Algerian government requires all non-Muslim organizations to register with the Minister for Non-Muslim Affairs in order to conduct activities and establish places of worship. The process for registration has been opaque and poorly implemented, creating legal uncertainty for some non-Muslim religious communities, which the government exploits to repress and prosecute religious minorities. Ordinance 06-03 also criminalizes proselytization by non-Muslims, with punishments of up to five years in prison and a maximum fine of $8,347 (one million dinars).

Restrictions on Christians

Authorities convicted the EPA's top leader, Pastor Salaheddine Chalah, and three other parishioners of "practicing worship without the prior opinion (or approval) of the National Commission for non-Muslim Worship." The three parishioners were sentenced to six months in prison, while Pastor Chalah, who was also convicted of "calling through social media for the disobedience of laws by a clergyman," was sentenced to 18 months in prison. Other EPA leaders reported increased harassment in late 2021 and early 2022.

A court in Tizi Ouzou sentenced Christian convert Mohamed Derrab to 18 months in prison for "shaking the faith of a Muslim." Derrab was preaching and distributing Bibles outside of his church in Tizi Ouzou following its closure by authorities. The government also continued to prosecute Pastor Hamid Boussadi for holding unauthorized worship services and proselytizing.

Restrictions on Muslims

Several Muslims remain detained on charges of blasphemy, including political opposition members Yacine Mebarki and Walid Kechida and scholar Dr. Saïd Djabelkhir. Authorities arrested Mebarki in 2020 for "inciting atheism" and "offending Islam" after finding a ripped Qur'an in his home. In 2021, authorities sentenced opposition activist Kechida to three years in prison with charges including "offending the precepts" of Islam in internet memes. In 2021, authorities arrested scholar and Sufism expert Djabelkhir and charged him with blasphemy after a fellow academic filed a complaint about his writings on various Islamic rituals. Local media reports indicate that at least one unnamed Muslim individual has been arrested on charges of blasphemy in 2022.

On June 6, 2022, the First Instance Tribunal in Bejaia charged 18 Ahmadiyya Muslims with "participation in an unauthorized group" and "denigrating Islam" under Article 46 of the Law on Associations and Article 144 of the Algerian Penal Code, respectively. The judge ordered the immediate detention of three members and released the others pending further investigation. Advocates estimate that over 100 Ahmadis are facing prosecution, mostly for "unauthorized worship" in the context of their unregistered status.

Targeting Religious Actors Perceived as Foreign

The Algerian government has historically targeted religious leaders and communities it views as foreign, sometimes threatening religious freedom rights in the process. Officials prosecute individuals associated with "foreign movements" with blasphemy charges to override a lack of evidence or extend prison sentences.

On December 26, an Algerian court sentenced Ahmadiyya Muslim Abdul Ghani to three years in prison and a fine of $1,500 (200,000 dinars). In his verdict, the judge accused the Ahmadiyya Muslim community of being a "threat to national security," an entity "working for foreign interests," and a threat to Algeria's traditional Maliki school of thought.

In 2022, the Algerian government requested that Caritas, a non-governmental development organization affiliated with the Catholic Church, cease operating in the country. Analysts posit that Caritas' supposed foreign ties influenced the government's decision. While members of the Catholic community still worship and practice their religion in Algeria, some religious minorities expressed concern that the government's targeting of Caritas may precede further restrictions against religious minorities viewed as outsiders.

Key U.S. Policy

On November 30, the State Department maintained Algeria on its Special Watch List for severe violations of religious freedom. Several high-profile U.S. officials visited Algeria in 2022, including Secretary of State Antony J. Blinken, Deputy Secretary of State Wendy R. Sherman, and an interagency delegation that included officials from the State Department, Department of Defense, and National Security Council. Topics for discussion included human rights and religious freedom concerns as well as stabilization and development assistance.

The United States is one of Algeria's top trading partners, and professional exchanges play a valuable role in strengthening the U.S.-Algeria law enforcement and security partnership at both the senior and working levels. The Middle East Partnership Initiative has supported the work of Algeria's civil society through programming that provides training to journalists, businesspeople, female entrepreneurs and parliamentarians, legal professionals, and the heads of leading nongovernmental organizations.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Azerbaijan trended negatively. The government continued to exert significant control over all religious practice, primarily through enforcement of the country's law On Freedom of Religious Beliefs (religion law). The religion law requires religious communities to register to legally engage in religious activity, requires state review and approval of religious literature and related materials, and places numerous other limitations on freedom of religion or belief. In March, President Ilham Aliyev signed into law amendments to the religion law that reassigned the power to appoint imams from the nominally independent Caucasus Muslim Board (CMB) to the official State Committee for Work with Religious Associations (SCWRA), further entrenching state control over the practice of Islam. In May, the SCWRA fired Shi'a imam Mirseymur Aliyev after he reportedly held Ramadan prayers on a different day than mandated by the state. That same month, the CMB announced the imposition of an age restriction that barred citizens over the age of 65 from performing the Hajj. Authorities also raided, seized religious literature from, and fined about 20 Muslims across the country who met for worship in private homes or held religious events with children.

While religious minorities have generally noted positive strides for religious freedom in Baku, others have shared that local authorities outside of the capital have surveilled Christians. During the year, the government failed yet again to register any non-Muslim religious communities, leaving some communities of Protestant Christians and Jehovah's Witnesses without registration and therefore unable to operate legally. Meanwhile, the SCWRA disclosed registering approximately 22 Muslim communities. Officials continued to reject requests for a civilian alternative to mandatory military service despite the allowance of such an option in the constitution. In a reversal of recent practice, Azerbaijan resumed detaining Jehovah's Witnesses who sought to conscientiously object. In July, conscription authorities detained Royal Karimov and held him for more than three months. In September, a local court sentenced Seymur Mammadov to nine months in prison for his refusal to serve in the military before converting that punishment in December to a one-year suspended sentence.

Azerbaijani nongovernmental organizations tracking political prisoners in the country documented as many as 19 individuals imprisoned at the end of the year for their religious activism, the majority of whom are members of the Muslim Unity Movement \(MUM\). Throughout the year, law enforcement regularly detained additional members of the MUM, which the group characterized as a "provocation and pressure against the movement." In June, MUM member Elgiz Mammadov alleged that he was raped while in police custody. In a positive development, a court granted early release to Muslim theologian Elshan Mustafaoglu, who had served seven and a half years of his 10-year prison sentence.

International bodies and other organizations continued to question the Azerbaijani government's willingness to protect and preserve religious and cultural heritage sites in Nagorno-Karabakh and neighboring territories under Azerbaijani control. In February, then Minister of Culture Anar Karimov announced the creation of a working group to remove Armenian Apostolic inscriptions from churches that he characterized as "fictitious." The government seemingly backpedaled on the plan following international outcry, and in March the European Parliament condemned "Azerbaijan's continued policy of erasing and denying the Armenian cultural heritage in and around Nagorno-Karabakh." During the reporting period, Caucasus Heritage Watch, a research initiative supported by Cornell University, documented through satellite imagery the destruction of St. Sargis Church. In past years, Azerbaijan has claimed that Armenian forces also damaged religious sites.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Include Azerbaijan on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Work with the government of Azerbaijan to revise the 2009 religion law, as most recently amended in 2022, to comply with international human rights standards and to bring it into conformity with recommendations made in 2012 by the Council of Europe's Venice Commission and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;
- Assist the Azerbaijani government, in collaboration with international partners, to develop an alternative civilian service and permit conscientious objection in line with its constitution and pursuant to its commitment made to the Council of Europe and obligations under international human rights law; and
- Allocate funding to the U.S. Agency for International Development and U.S. Embassy in Baku to restore, preserve, and protect places of worship and other religious or cultural sites in Nagorno-Karabakh and surrounding territories.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Raise concerns, through public hearings and other actions, about Azerbaijan's religious freedom and broader human rights abuses, including treatment of the MUM, directly with the Azerbaijani Embassy and other government officials and advocate for the release of all prisoners of conscience.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Special Report: Tolerance, Religious Freedom, and Authoritarianism
- Podcast: Differences between Religious Tolerance and Religious Freedom

Background

The U.S. government estimates the population of Azerbaijan at more than 10.3 million people, of whom approximately 96 percent identify as Muslim. According to Azerbaijani government statistics, as many as 65 percent of Muslims identify as Shi'a, while the remaining 35 percent identify as Sunni. The remaining four percent of the population comprises atheists, Armenian Apostolics, Baha'is, Catholics, Georgian Orthodox, members of the International Society for Krishna Consciousness, Jehovah's Witnesses, Jews, Molokans, Protestants, and Russian Orthodox. The constitution defines the state as secular and mandates the separation of religion and state. Despite these provisions, however, the government is actively involved in the regulation and management of virtually all religious activities. In general, the government remained concerned about the potential for "religious strife" in the country and undertook efforts to continue to limit independent religious activism and activities in 2022.

Legislating Increased Control of Muslims

At the beginning of the year, Azerbaijan's parliament introduced a proposal to amend the country's religion law and reduce the role of the CMB, an entity that has historically overseen the practice of Islam in the country. The government formally adopted the amendments in March, which removed the ability of the CMB to appoint imams to mosques and shrines and assigned that authority instead to an official state body, the SCWRA. A member of parliament explained the change as a measure to ensure that imams have a "pro-state position," although other politicians objected to the move on the grounds that it violated the constitution. Similarly, the government eliminated the right of the CMB to register mosques and permitted state oversight of donations to religious associations.

Retaliation for Conscientious Objection

Although the constitution provides for an alternative to mandatory military service, the government did not offer one in practice and retaliated against conscientious objectors who requested an alternative civilian service due to their religious beliefs. In July, authorities detained Jehovah's Witness Royal Karimov after he disclosed his conscientious objection; they held him against his will at a local military unit for more than three months before releasing him in November. In September, the Goranboy District Court sentenced Jehovah's Witness Seymur Mammadov to nine months in prison for his conscientious objection. Following Mammadov's appeal of the verdict, the court ruled to suspend his sentence and subsequently released him in mid-December. According to Mammadov, he was not permitted to have a Bible while in prison. Other Jehovah's Witnesses remained subject to travel restrictions due to their conscientious objection.

Detention of MUM Members

The government increasingly cracked down on the MUM, a Shi'a Muslim group that has criticized the state's control of religion. In May, a court sentenced MUM member Razi Humbatov to six years in prison on drug trafficking charges that the group asserted were fabricated to punish him for his public criticism of authorities. During the course of Humbatov's trial, police detained five additional MUM members who came to the courthouse to protest, some of whom received 30 days of administrative detention and claimed that the police beat and tortured them. In June, police detained MUM member Fariz Aliyev after he protested in support of MUM leader Taleh Bagirzade and other religious prisoners. Throughout the year, police also detained MUM members Elsan Abbasov, Shahin Gadirov, Nejat Aliyev, Samir Babayev, and Mirtofiq Huseynov on alleged drug-related charges. In two separate instances in June and November, Bagirzade and other imprisoned MUM members participated in a hunger strike to protest ongoing and regular police abuse, including allegations of torture and religious insults.

Key U.S. Policy

In 2022, the United States and Azerbaijan marked 30 years of diplomatic relations that have largely prioritized cooperation on European energy security, bilateral trade and investment, and efforts to combat terrorism and transnational threats. The U.S. government regularly engaged with Azerbaijani counterparts to underscore the importance of ongoing peace negotiations with Armenia and to urge an end to military hostilities. In June, Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs Karen Donfried traveled to Azerbaijan, where she highlighted U.S. support for fundamental freedoms and met with Azerbaijani civil society.

The U.S. Department of State continued to raise religious freedom concerns directly with Azerbaijani officials. In May, Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom Rashad Hussain met with then Minister of Culture Anar Karimov and discussed "best practices for preserving the country's beautifully diverse religious and cultural heritage." In June, Deputy Chief of Mission Michael Dickerson met with officials from the SCWRA. In November and December, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and House Foreign Affairs Committee respectively held hearings on U.S. policy in the Caucasus that involved significant discussion of Azerbaijan.

On December 9, the State Department designated Kerim Heydar Alimardanov, an official in the Main Department for Combating Organized Crime in the Ministry of Internal Affairs, pursuant to Section 7031(c) for "his involvement in a gross violation of human rights, namely torture of detainees in 2015 and 2016." Alimardanov was reportedly involved in the 2015 Nardaran case that led to the arrest, alleged torture, and sentencing to prison of many MUM members.

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

USCIRF–RECOMMENDED FOR SPECIAL WATCH LIST

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in the Central African Republic (CAR) remained poor. Armed group violence, which resumed in early 2020 after a brief respite, led to the politicization of religious identity in several localities and resulted in violence based on religious or ethnoreligious affiliation. Previous years' trends of state-backed fighters targeting Muslim civilians with violence, torture, and extrajudicial detention continued. In at least one instance, fighters defending Muslim communities targeted Christian civilians in retaliation for state-backed abuses against Muslims.

The CAR government continued to collaborate with nonstate armed actors, including the Wagner Group—a military contractor with ties to the Russian government—and local vigilante fighters, despite trends of these actors targeting religious minorities and committing human rights abuses. Furthermore, the CAR government made efforts to shield these partners from accountability for abuses, inhibiting multilateral efforts to investigate allegations of religious targeting and human rights violations.

From September 2021 to February 2022, national defense forces and other security personnel recruited approximately 600 fighters from local vigilante groups in Basse-Kotto and Ouaka Prefectures to fight against rebel groups. Elements from the former Christian and animist-affiliated anti-balaka armed groups committed abuses, mainly against Muslim communities. In May, national defense forces arrested and tortured three Fulani Muslim youths in Bokolobo, Ouaka Prefecture, killing one of them. The Unité pour la paix en Centrafrique (Union for Peace in Central African Republic), a local rebel group in the area, vowed retaliation and subsequently attacked a national defense forces checkpoint in Bokolobo, Ouaka Prefecture, killing two soldiers, six anti-balaka combatants, and five civilians from the Christian community. On the following day in the same area, presumed national defense forces and anti-balaka combatants carried out a reprisal attack on a Muslim community, killing nine civilians.

Muslim Central Africans also continue to face discrimination and displacement. Government authorities charge Muslims higher fees and fines than non-Muslims for the same services or penalties. Analysts familiar with the situation on the ground assess that Muslims are disproportionately represented among CAR's displaced population and have struggled to return safely to their areas of origin due to continued intimidation and lack of support.

The Special Criminal Court (SCC) tried its first cases against armed group leaders responsible for crimes against humanity, war crimes, and severe violence and made several other prominent arrests. However, executive authorities continued trends of undermining justice mechanisms and constitutional power in 2022. President Faustin-Archange Touadera forcibly removed the Constitutional Court's presiding judge, who had spoken out against the illegality of Touadera's efforts to change the constitution to allow himself to run for a third presidential term.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Maintain CAR on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Provide financial, administrative, and diplomatic support to the SCC and other investigations into ethnoreligious targeting and other human rights abuses by state actors or state-backed foreign fighters in CAR, and urge the CAR government to cease all obstructions to such investigations;
- Impose targeted sanctions on CAR government agencies and officials and other relevant foreign actors responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals' assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations; and
- Continue to allocate funding for humanitarian assistance, including for refugees, internally displaced persons (IDPs), and returnees as well as funding programs to rebuild mosques destroyed during the civil conflict.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Factsheet: Religious Freedom Concerns in Central Africa
- Podcast: Religious Freedom Backslides in Central African Republic

Background

CAR's constitution provides for freedom of religion or belief and equal protection under the law, regardless of religion. Approximately 89 percent of CAR's population identify as Christian, nine percent identify as Muslim, one percent practice folk religions, and one percent are religiously unaffiliated.

In 2012, predominantly Muslim militias in CAR's north mobilized and marched on the capital in response to longstanding grievances with the government's marginalization of and discrimination against Muslim minorities. In response, militias from predominantly Christian and folk religion-practicing communities mobilized for self-protection and began retaliating against Muslim civilian communities. This triggered more than half a decade of political and ethnoreligious violence, including attacks on individuals based on their religious identity and deliberate attacks on houses of worship and religious enclaves in cities across CAR. Muslim communities bore the brunt of the conflict, with violence displacing an estimated 80 percent of CAR's Muslim population in the first two years.

In 2019 and 2020, instances of religious violence decreased following a political agreement and increased CAR government cooperation with the Wagner Group. However, following contested elections at the end of 2020 and the remobilization of a united rebel militia, state-sponsored abuses against Muslims have been on the rise.

Politicization of Religion by Armed Actors

In several regions of CAR, ethnicity and religion are so strongly linked that violence based on ethnoreligious identity poses a risk to religious freedom. Since the resumption of fighting in December 2020, the United Nations (UN) secretary general has found that targeted arrests of alleged rebel collaborators "disproportionately affected religious and ethnic minorities." A joint human rights investigation reported a notable "increase in targeted attacks against the civilian population, especially Muslims" and found that CAR authorities used a state of emergency to commit abuses that "specifically targeted certain communities (Muslims and Peuhl)."

The CAR government has also tolerated religious freedom violations by both foreign and domestic proxy fighters it enlists to help achieve military objectives. In Ouaka prefecture, the CAR government recruited fighters from former Christian- and animist-affiliated anti-balaka militias that reportedly targeted Muslim communities on the basis of religion in their campaign to eliminate rebel militias. These vigilante fighters also carried out a reprisal attack on a Muslim community in Bokolobo after rebel fighters in the area attacked their checkpoint in May.

Relying on foreign and proxy fighters complicates the CAR government's involvement in the violations they commit, but it does not absolve the government of complicity or responsibility. CAR authorities have acted to protect both Wagner and anti-balaka elements operating on the government's behalf from accountability for religious violence and human rights abuses.

Justice Progress and Setbacks

Strong justice mechanisms are crucial to achieving justice for victims of religious violence in CAR and deterring future violations. In particular, the SCC, a hybrid court established to investigate and prosecute serious international crimes committed since 2003, began hearing cases in 2022. Its first case resulted in the conviction of three members of rebel militia 3R for crimes against humanity, war crimes, and severe violence against civilians. The SCC also arrested two former Central African Armed Forces members and one ex-Séléka militia general in 2022 on charges of crimes against humanity.

Yet, SCC trials and other justice efforts have been under threat from other parts of the CAR government. Last year, national security forces prevented the SCC from accessing former armed group leader Hassan Boubou Ali for his scheduled appearance and released him in contravention of the SCC's warrant. In 2022, the CAR government obstructed UN efforts to investigate religious targeting and other human rights abuses.

President Touadera also sought in 2022 to undermine other government institutions and the constitution. In May, Touadera proposed reforms to eliminate term limits, and in August he established a commission to revise the constitution. When the independent Constitutional Court declared those efforts unconstitutional and annulled the commission, Touadera requested the Constitutional Court's head jurist, Daniele Darlan, to retire, which she refused to do. Touadera then forcibly dismissed Darlan by decree, which many considered unconstitutional, and appointed Jean Pierre Waboé as the new head of the Constitutional Court.

Given that security forces under executive control in CAR have shown bias against religious minorities, the independence of judicial institutions is critical to ensuring accountability for abuses by government actors. Recent government efforts undermine the constitution and erode the independence of the judiciary, threatening mechanisms designed to provide justice for human rights abuses and religious freedom violations.

Key U.S. Policy

In 2022, the United States pledged $48 million in emergency humanitarian assistance to CAR in addition to the $140 million already allocated. The U.S. government remains a main source of financial support to the SCC.

In October, the spokesperson for the U.S. Embassy in Bangui, CAR, publicly expressed concern regarding political developments in the country after Touadera's administration removed the president of the Constitutional Court. A delegation from CAR attended the Joseph R. Biden administration's U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit in December.

On November 30, recognizing escalating state abuses against Muslim communities in CAR, the U.S. Department of State placed CAR on its Special Watchlist for the first time for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom. The U.S. government also designated the Wagner Group, a military contractor closely linked with the Russian government, as an Entity of Particular Concern for engaging in particularly severe religious freedom violations in CAR in 2021, including attacks on mosques and disappearing Muslim leaders.

USCIRF-RECOMMENDED FOR SPECIAL WATCH LIST

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Egypt generally trended consistent with 2021. The government continued to make overtures toward religious minority communities and to promote religious tolerance. For example, under President Abdel Fattah El-Sisi, the government appointed the first-ever Christian judge to the Supreme Constitutional Court in February. Egypt also continued its cultural heritage preservation program, announcing the restoration of more historic synagogues. In May, authorities convicted and sentenced the “extremist Islamist” murderer of a Coptic Orthodox priest. The government also continued reviewing and approving Christians’ applications to register their worship sites as churches.

However, restrictions on new church construction and the slow pace of approvals for the backlog of legalization applications filed since the Church Construction Law of 2016 have forced many congregations to assemble in structurally unsafe buildings not intended for communal worship. In August, the government attributed a series of deadly fires at several Coptic Orthodox churches to faulty electrical setups and other structural deficiencies, which human rights organizations identified as a result of systemic discrimination against Copts. Rights organizations have also noted that the 2016 legislation is inherently discriminatory in continuing to subject churches to requirements and approval processes that do not apply to Sunni mosques. The 2016 law also offers no legalization process for the houses of worship of Ahmadiyya Muslims, Baha’is, Shi’a Muslims, and other religious groups. In addition, even after successfully registering, some churches continued to face threats. In June, the government’s approval of the license for Luxor’s Archangel Michael Church prompted some Islamist residents of that and other villages to riot and set fire to Copts’ personal property.

State security and prosecutors continued to invoke the blasphemy statute and other laws to arrest, detain, convict, and sentence Egyptians from a diverse range of religious backgrounds. Reports of individual violent assaults against Copts increased, with several attacks unfolding in April during the seasons of Christian Easter and Muslim Ramadan. This included crimes such as the fatal stabbing of Father Arsanios Wadid and the deadly shooting of Rani Ra’fat by six men, one of whom posted social media videos confirming a militant Islamist motivation for the murder. In July, another assailant stabbed the father and son owners of a shop in Giza that sold alcohol—a practice associated with non-Muslims. Coptic women suffered both anti-Christian and female-targeted abuse, such as the suspected kidnapping and potential forced conversion to Islam of Mariam Waheeb and a male pharmacist’s physical assault of Naveen Sobhi for appearing in non-Islamic dress during the Muslim holy days of Ramadan. The latter case is notable for the police’s pressuring of the victim to agree to adjudication by a local, nonjudicial “reconciliation” session, which doubly victimizes Copts and other minorities by forcing them to reconcile with their attacker, commonly resulting in lenient punishments for assailants. In February, Egypt’s child-fostering laws and practices attracted scrutiny when authorities removed a four-year-old boy from his Coptic Orthodox adoptive family and placed him in an orphanage upon discovering his origins as an unidentified infant that a priest had found in the local church. Although prosecutors reportedly invoked laws presuming the Muslim identity of unknown children, in December, Egypt’s National Council for Human Rights asserted the illegality of the child’s transfer to the orphanage, urging the government to return him to his would-be adoptive parents. Personal status laws regulating family matters such as marriage, divorce, and inheritance also disproportionately burden religious minorities, especially women. In December, President El-Sisi encouraged “all segments of society” to participate in dialogue surrounding draft amendments to these laws.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Include Egypt on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Conduct a comprehensive review of all U.S. assistance to Egypt and continue to withhold a portion of Foreign Military Financing (FMF) for specified international religious freedom violations along with broader human rights concerns; and
- Incorporate religious freedom concerns into U.S.-Egypt bilateral engagement by encouraging Egypt to: 1) ensure equal protection of all religious communities, including through phasing out customary reconciliation councils to resolve incidents of violence against religious minorities and proposing universal “houses of worship” legislation that treats identically the construction, repair, and registration of houses of worship of all religions; 2) repeal Article 98(f) of the Criminal Code, which penalizes “ridiculing or insulting a heavenly religion or a sect following it,” and until that is accomplished limit the conditions under which the law is applied and allow charged individuals to post bail; and 3) lift all travel bans and asset freezes on released religious prisoners of conscience and establish independent oversight and appeals mechanisms for travel bans.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Raise religious freedom issues through hearings, meetings, letters, congressional delegation trips abroad, or other actions.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Special Report: Assessing Religious Freedom in Egyptian Curriculum Reform
- Event: Assessing Religious Freedom in Egyptian Curriculum Reform
- Press Statement: USCIRF Welcomes Egypt’s Release of Coptic Activist Ramy Kamel
- Press Statement: USCIRF Commends Release of Egyptian Religious Prisoner Reda Abdel Rahman

Background

Article 2 of Egypt's constitution identifies Islam as the state religion and the “principles of Shari’a” as the primary source of legislation. Article 64 provides for “absolute” freedom of belief, although only adherents of “heavenly religions” (Islam, Christianity, and Judaism) may practice their religion publicly and build places of worship. Bans from 1960 remain in effect on Jehovah's Witnesses and Baha'is.

Egypt's population is approximately 107.7 million, an estimated 90 percent of whom are Sunni Muslims. Non-Sunni Muslims such as Shi'a comprise less than one percent. At an estimated 10 percent or more, Egypt's indigenous Copts constitute the largest Christian minority in the Middle East and North Africa. Christian leaders estimate over 90 percent of Copts belong to the traditional Coptic Orthodox Church, with Coptic Catholics, Coptic Evangelical Protestants, and other small denominations comprising the remainder. There are reportedly up to 2,000 Baha'is, approximately 1,500 Jehovah's Witnesses, and fewer than 10 Jews in Egypt.

State Targeting of Religious Identity, Expression, and Activism

The Egyptian criminal justice system remained the locus of systematic and ongoing religious freedom violations. In January and February, authorities released from long-term detention religious prisoners of conscience Ramy Kamel, a Copt, and Reda Abdel Rahman, a Qur'anist Muslim. Both Abdel Rahman and Patrick Zaki—a Coptic human rights researcher released at the end of 2021—remain under travel bans. Throughout 2022, Zaki also endured numerous adjournments of his trial for the charge of “spreading false news” via the publication of an online testimonial discussing anti-Coptic discrimination. In June, Al-Mataria prosecutors wielded the same charge to detain Coptic attorney Hani Farouk Gibran—later releasing him—for posting messages on social media such as, “No to attacks on churches in Egypt, burning homes and kidnapping girls.”

Egypt continues to enforce Law 98\(f\) of Egypt's Penal Code, a blasphemy statute that bans “insulting the heavenly religions.” In September, an appeals court in Cairo upheld a five-year prison sentence against Marco Girgis, a Copt, on charges including breach of 98(f) and “exploiting religion in promoting extremist ideas, contempt of Islam, and transgression of the values of the Egyptian family” for allegedly sharing sexually explicit digital material. In June, United Nations human rights experts expressed concern over the detention and potential deportation of Abdulbaqi Saeed Abdo, a Yemeni asylum seeker and convert to Christianity accused of “contempt of Islam.”

Egyptians of Sunni Muslim backgrounds also faced government harassment and detention. In February, the Court of Cassation rejected the appeal of imprisoned blogger Anas Hassan, arrested in 2019 for administering an “Egyptian Atheists” page on Facebook and charged with violation of 98(f) and information technology laws. Also that month, the public prosecutor stated it would order “investigative measures” against journalist and television presenter Ibrahim Issa for his public statements questioning a miracle connected to the Prophet Muhammad. In August, the Heliopolis Misdemeanors Court announced the trial of another television personality, Islamic preacher and Al-Azhar instructor Mabrouk Attia, for on-air jokes about Jesus Christ following a lawyer's filing of a criminal complaint that the statements showed contempt for both Christianity and Islam.

Authorities also arrested or detained individuals related to mob protests and attacks on Christian churches; however, several such detainees were members of targeted church communities. In January, security officials arrested nine Copts for online videos showcasing their peaceful protest of the government's failure to permit the rebuilding of the fire-ravaged St. Joseph and Abu Seifein Church in Samalout. Charges included “participating in a demonstration threatening public safety and committing a terrorist act.” They were released in April, the same month the government relaunched its Presidential Pardon Committee, possibly in advance of the 27th Conference of the Parties, or COP27 climate summit, which Egypt hosted in November.

Educational Curriculum Reforms

The government of Egypt implemented some religious tolerance reforms to the national primary and secondary school educational curricula consistent with its 2021 National Human Rights Strategy. However, a USCIRF assessment found that despite slight improvements, religionization of the curriculum remained endemic. Subjects such as Arabic Language and Social Studies advanced government-endorsed versions of Sunni Islam while underrepresenting, excluding, or negatively characterizing—for example, using antisemitic rhetoric toward—religious minorities such as non-Sunni Muslims, Christians, and Jews.

Key U.S. Policy

The U.S.-Egypt strategic partnership assumed an even higher profile throughout the year in advance of the COP27. Despite Egypt's robust efforts to rehabilitate international perceptions of the country's human rights violations, the administration of President Joseph R. Biden and the U.S. Congress took measures to communicate concerns over Egypt's human rights record. As in 2021, Congress conditioned up to $300 million of the $1.3 billion annual FMF aid package to Egypt on human rights improvements. However, in September, the administration chose to withhold only \$130 million. In approving the other $170 million, the United States noted part of the grant was due to President El-Sisi's release of 500 political prisoners out of the total of more than 60,000 in detention. The withheld aid accounted for 10 percent of the United States' total annual allocation to Egypt.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, Indonesia’s religious freedom conditions remained poor, as in the prior year. The country maintains several regulations that either constitute blasphemy laws or effectively function as such: Presidential Decree No. 1/PNPS/1965, Criminal Code Article 156\(a\), and Law No. 11/2008 on Electronic Information and Transaction (known as the ITE law) Articles 27(3) and 28(2). Indonesia also maintains a 2006 joint regulation on houses of worship that local authorities often exploit to hinder religious communities’ right to build and maintain houses of worship. Minority religious leaders throughout Indonesia report that this regulation enables corruption, emboldening local Islamic religious leaders and/or political officials to coerce bribes from religious communities to obtain permission to proceed with construction. In addition, minorities’ houses of worship—especially for groups that are officially unrecognized—are especially vulnerable to attacks and lack the protections afforded to majority-affiliated religious sites in law or in practice. For example, in early January, Pontianak District Court sentenced 21 men to only four and a half months in prison for ransacking and burning an Ahmadiyya mosque in West Kalimantan the prior year but released them a mere 16 days later.

Indonesia recognizes six official religions, excluding the less than 0.5 percent of the population who practice traditional or indigenous faiths, including forms of animism or syncretic versions of religions. In 2016, followers of traditional faiths appealed to the Constitutional Court against the 2013 Civil Administrative Law, which codified discriminatory regulations such as forcing members of indigenous groups to leave the religion section of their national identification cards blank. Despite the Constitutional Court ruling in favor of traditional faith communities, members still reported discrimination in accessing public services such as education.

In December, the Indonesian Parliament passed a new criminal code that reinforces the criminalization of blasphemy, further undermining religious freedom. Article 300 broadens the sorts of acts, speech, or outcomes to which the blasphemy prohibition applies and expands enforcement to include fines and up to three years in prison. Article 302 criminalizes “inciting” someone to leave their faith—an offense that carries a punishment of up to two years’ imprisonment. The law replaced the Dutch colonial-era code and will gradually take effect over a period of up to three years. This legal development coincided with a general backsliding of democratic norms as well as growing political and societal influence from conservative Islamist organizations, such as the quasi-governmental Indonesia Ulema Council (MUI), that seek to impose their religious interpretations on others. The MUI responded to public criticism of provisions in the then draft criminal code that incorporated the MUI’s preferred religious views on issues of sexual morality by insisting that all six of Indonesia’s officially recognized religions condemn the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and intersex (LGBTQI+) community and therefore the government should not protect its members.

The enshrinement of a particular interpretation of Islam into Indonesian law that is binding on all people regardless of their religious beliefs coincides with the government’s increased level of international cooperation to combat religiously based violent extremism, which remained a persistent concern. The country’s counterterrorism force, known as Densus 88, continued to pursue radical Islamist groups believed responsible for killing several Christian farmers in Sulawesi the prior year. In September, Densus 88 pursued and killed a group of radical Islamist militants in that area, and in December, the National Police arrested 24 suspected terrorists in connection with a suicide bombing that targeted a police precinct in Astanaanyar, West Java.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Include Indonesia on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Work with the Indonesian government to:
 - Amend the criminal code to comply with international human rights standards, including relating to the freedom of religion or belief;
 - Repeal or amend the existing blasphemy laws, including Indonesia’s ITE law;
 - Release all individuals currently detained or imprisoned on blasphemy charges;
 - Repeal or revise the 2006 Joint Regulation on houses of worship.
 - Incorporate training on international religious freedom standards into the bilateral partnership on combating violent extremism, including the U.S. Agency for International Development’s (USAID) funded programs such as the Harmoni and MAJu projects, and all education initiatives to which the U.S. government contributes; and
- Urge the Indonesian government, as chair of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and its Intergovernmental Commission on Human Rights, to publicly advocate for religious freedom, pluralism, and inclusion throughout the region.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Raise Indonesia’s ongoing religious freedom challenges through hearings, meetings, letters, congressional delegation trips abroad, and other actions.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Factsheet: Blasphemy and Related Laws in ASEAN Member Countries
- Podcast: The Legacy of Blasphemy Laws in Southeast Asia

Background

Indonesia is the world's most populous Muslim-majority country. Muslims comprise 87.2 percent of the country's 267 million citizens, with around 99 percent identifying as Sunni and less than one percent and 0.2 percent identifying as Shi'a or Ahmadiyya Muslim, respectively. Protestant Christians comprise seven percent of the population, Roman Catholics 2.9 percent, and Hindus 1.7 percent; 0.9 percent identify with other minority religions such as Buddhism or Confucianism.

In light of this diversity, Indonesia has a long tradition of religious pluralism. Article 29 of its constitution "guarantees the independence of each resident to embrace religion and worship according to their respective religions and beliefs." The government has long promoted Pancasila, an ideology that comprises five principles: monotheism, civilized humanity, national unity, deliberative democracy, and social justice. However, its promotion of this ideology extends only to those religious groups that leaders of the officially recognized religions determine as legitimate. In addition, the government requires all citizens to list their religious affiliation on their identification cards—a practice that has forced nonreligious persons and members of unrecognized religious minorities to misrepresent their faith or leave the field blank. This omission can impact access to licenses, permits, education, and employment.

In addition to hosting the G20 meeting in November, Indonesia also hosted the G20 Religion Forum, which brought together religious and government leaders to discuss interfaith initiatives and strategies to confront extremism. That same month, Indonesia launched a joint campaign with India—a country that USCIRF recommends as a "country of particular concern," or CPC—to promote moderate Islam. In January 2023, just after the reporting period, Indonesia assumed the chairmanship of the regional ASEAN, placing it in a potential position to guide the bloc's response to human rights challenges relevant to religious freedom, such as the ongoing conflict in Burma.

Criminal Code Process

According to human rights activists, the government provided minimal, if any, opportunity for civil society and religious minorities to engage with the criminal code revision process since the new draft code was first introduced in 2019. In contrast, officials reportedly consulted with conservative Islamic groups during that process in coordination with the MUI. However, religious freedom advocates have expressed tentative hope that the new code's gradual implementation may afford civil society and the judicial system space to review and modify its provisions.

Limited Central Government Authority

Many of Indonesia's religious freedom violations against religious minorities are perpetrated by local governing authorities, far outside the control of Indonesia's central government. In March, the mayor of a city within greater Jakarta publicly opposed a Ministry of Religious Affairs regulation on the volume level of the azan, or Muslim call to prayer, which Muslim and non-Muslim neighbors and officials cannot publicly criticize without risk of blasphemy allegations. In July, reports circulated of public and private schools forcing girls to wear the hijab, illustrating the central government's limited success in preventing local schools from implementing such measures. Furthermore, in some areas where central or provincial government authorities have delegated social and education services to quasi-governmental and nongovernmental organizations, violent Islamist groups have set up schools to reportedly radicalize children. Such groups also run boarding schools and coordinate through social media to raise funds for violent Islamist activities.

Expansion of Provincial Religious Laws

In July, the Indonesian government formally declared that the customs of the Minangkabau people, who comprise the ethnic majority of West Sumatra, are based on the philosophical values of the Qur'an. Provincial leaders requested this legal decision to legitimize their further development of local laws based on Shari'a (Syariah). The central government currently exempts the autonomous province of Aceh from national laws and permits it to implement its own legal system, which is based on a rigid interpretation of Syariah and is enforced through a religious police force. Enforcement mandates women to wear hijabs and bans them from straddling motorcycles, among other restrictions, regardless of their faith or personal choice. Violators of these religiously based laws are often subjected to corporal punishment, and neither Muslims nor non-Muslims are able to opt out of this official interpretation.

Key U.S. Policy

Throughout 2022, the USAID-funded Harmoni program continued to support the Ministry of Social Affairs and local organizations by strengthening Inter-Religious Harmony Forums; countering violent extremist narratives through community, university, and school-based campaigns; and rehabilitating women and children returning from conflict zones in the Middle East and the Philippines. The United States also maintained bilateral exchange programs such as the International Visitor Leadership Program to host Indonesian leaders in the United States.

In February, the United States marked one year since the administration of President Joseph R. Biden released its Indo-Pacific Strategy. As part of this strategy, the United States launched the Indonesia Millennium Challenge Corporation, which dedicated $698 million to support infrastructure and development goals as well as initiatives for clean energy. The United States also allocated resources for a 30 percent increase in educational advising centers in Indonesia, although these programs did not include discussion of religious freedom or broader human rights. In November, rhetoric from the MUI and other religious organizations against the LGBTQI+ community prompted the Indonesian government to cancel a visit from the U.S. Special Envoy to Advance the Human Rights of LGBTQI+ Persons.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Iraq continued to deteriorate as a result of the Iraqi Federal Government’s (IFG) intensifying political factionalism and resulting administrative paralysis. The government’s instability fueled intra-Shi’a Muslim and Sunni Muslim-disenfranchising sectarianism and stalled progress on initiatives that would help advance freedom of religion or belief, including addressing the pressing concerns of Iraq’s diverse religious minorities. The year-long government deadlock arose from the October 2021 elections, which cemented divisions among followers of Shi’a Muslim cleric Muqtada al-Sadr, rival Shi’a factions aligned with Iran, and Sunni Muslims of both Arab and Kurdish backgrounds. Following al-Sadr’s unexpected resignation from Parliament and Sadrist’s protests in Baghdad in the summer, their Iran-backed Shi’a opponents moved forward with a new government in October.

Late in December, the new administration formally recognized for the first time in 47 years Yazidis’ ownership of their residential properties in the Sinjar district in northern Iraq. However, the year of political stasis exacerbated the government’s neglect of other initiatives that would benefit vulnerable religious minorities. The government did not adequately implement the Yazidi Survivors Law \(YSL\), which Parliament passed in 2021 to provide reparations for Yazidi, Christian, Turkmen, and Shabak victims of the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS). Likewise, the IFG and the semi-autonomous Kurdistan Regional Government (KRG)—which each lay claim to Sinjar—failed to substantially carry out the provisions of the 2020 United Nations (UN)-brokered Sinjar Agreement intended to stabilize the area and enable the return of Yazidis displaced by ISIS’s genocide.

The IFG did not bring under control the Popular Mobilization Units (PMU or PMF) or al-Hashd al-Shaabi, a government-affiliated umbrella organization of largely Shi’a Muslim, pro-Iran militias. These groups used checkpoint interrogations and detentions, enforced disappearance, extortion, and physical violence and targeted Sunni Muslims and other religious minorities, including Christians and Yazidis. On the outskirts of Mosul and in the Nineveh Plains—areas with numerous indigenous religious minorities and subject to the IFG’s and KRG’s jurisdictional disputes—the PMF’s aggressive use of checkpoints, seizure of Christians’ land and businesses, and other targeted harassment deterred displaced Christians’ return to the area and fueled further emigration. Iraqi military forces also targeted religious minorities, as in a May operation against Yazidi fighters, which displaced at least 3,000 Yazidi civilians—already traumatized by recent displacement and by recurrent Turkish airstrikes—in their “largest exodus” since the 2014 genocide.

For its part, the KRG continued to promote religious coexistence and its status as a refuge for over two million religiously diverse Iraqis and Syrians displaced to the Kurdistan Region of Iraq (KRI) by years of conflict and the threat of ISIS. In October, the KRG, along with religious minority stakeholders, participated in a series of UN workshops analyzing the KRG’s laws, mechanisms, policies, and programs with the goal of strengthening its protection of minority groups’ rights. However, some Christian groups indigenous to the Nineveh Plains raised concerns over the KRG’s failure to resolve longstanding grievances such as lack of KRG funding and other support for Assyrian-run schools; discrimination in employment and municipal services; and unresolved KRG-tolerated or -initiated misappropriation of Christians’ land, businesses, and other property. Christian residents have cited their lack of security and threats from ISIS, the PMF/PMU, and the KRG as the main drivers of emigration from the area, bringing their ancient communities almost to the point of extinction. Similarly, Yazidi genocide survivors feared returning to their Sinjar homeland—caught in the stranglehold of vying militias—and remained in displacement camps within the KRI prone to fire and other hazards.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Include Iraq on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Use diplomatic channels and multilateral engagement to encourage the IFG and the KRG to expedite processing the return of kidnapped and displaced Yazidi genocide survivors and assist them in reintegrating into Iraqi society; to resolve conflicts over disputed areas per Article 140 of the Iraqi constitution, while including all religious and ethnic minorities in the process; and
- to comprehensively implement the Sinjar Agreement with full inclusion of the Yazidi community in particular;
- Impose targeted sanctions on additional PMF leaders responsible for severe violations of religious freedom by freezing those individuals’ assets and/or barring their entry into the United States under human rights related financial and visa authorities, citing specific religious freedom violations; and
- Continue to assist Iraqi religious and ethnic minorities in rebuilding communities devastated by ISIS and in advocating for their own interests, including opening a broad discussion on holding fair and free elections to select their own local leaders as well as representatives to the IFG and KRG.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Incorporate religious freedom concerns into its larger oversight of the U.S.-Iraq bilateral relationship through hearings, letters, and congressional delegations and by appropriating funding for development programming to strengthen religious freedom.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Press Release: USCIRF Commemorates the Eighth Anniversary of the Yazidi Genocide
- Factsheet: Religious Freedom amid Iraq’s Political Crisis
- Podcast: Recovering from Genocide: The Yazidis’ Return to Sinjar
- Podcast: Iraq’s Beleaguered Religious Minority Communities

Background

Iraq's population is approximately 95–98 percent Muslim, with 61–64 percent Shi'a and 29–34 percent Sunni. Christians—consisting of Catholic, Orthodox and Assyrian Church of the East, Protestant Evangelical, and others—comprise approximately one percent, although accurate figures are obscured by frequent displacement both within and beyond Iraq's borders.

Iraq is unique as a Shi'a-majority Arab state. It has ties to both the Sunni-majority Arabic-speaking world and Iran, a non-Arab Shi'a country. Iraq is also home to numerous ethnic and religious minorities such as Kurds, Yazidis, Sabean Mandaean, Kaka'is, Shabaks, and Turkmen as well as members of Assyrian, Chaldean, Syriac, Armenian, and other Christian churches. In 2022, at least 2,763 Yazidi women and girls kidnapped from Sinjar by ISIS were still missing, many potentially hidden within northeast Syrian camps detaining ISIS fighters and their families. Yazidi Iraqis welcomed the international community's additional steps toward accountability and justice, such as a German court's judgment in July convicting a repatriated German ISIS member of genocide.

Article 2 of the federal constitution establishes Islam as the official religion and affirms “the full religious rights of freedom of belief and religious practice to all individuals such as Christians, Yazidis and Mandaean Sabaeans.” However, the penal code contains blasphemy statutes, and since 2016, the Law of United National Identity requires non-Muslim minors to convert to Islam if one of their parents becomes Muslim, as in the ongoing legal case of an Assyrian child.

In the years since the 2003 collapse of Saddam Hussein's regime, sectarianism has flourished, with political power in the IFG distributed along religious lines among dominant Shi'a political parties, a Kurdish president, an Arab Shi'a prime minister, and an Arab Sunni president of Parliament.

Other Religious Freedom Issues in the IFG and KRG

Within weeks of the new administration's emergence in October, IFG agencies issued eviction notices to Christians in a displacement settlement in Baghdad's Zayouna district, leaving the families—many of whom ISIS had displaced from their Nineveh homelands in 2014—facing homelessness during winter. The evictions were completed in February 2023.

Community members from other religious minorities, including Sabaeen Mandaean, Shabaks, and Kaka'is, have communicated their intentions to lobby international bodies for minority protections and the new IFG administration for constitutional and other legal safeguards for religious and ethnic minorities. These activists note that, for example, Article 125 of the federal constitution sets forth “administrative, political, cultural, and educational rights” for minorities but lacks mechanisms of enforcement.

Political representation remained an important concern for religious minorities, with communities pointing out flaws in both the IFG's and KRG's quota systems for elected representatives from minority religious backgrounds. Some minority advocates suggested both the IFG and KRG amend their existing quotas to ensure minority representation is effective and meaningful rather than symbolic and vulnerable to dominant religious groups' political appropriation of minorities' seats. In February, the Iraqi Federal Supreme Court further limited the political representation of Yazidis, Shabaks, and Feyli Kurds, forcing those minorities to campaign within the already severely circumscribed Christian and Mandaean components. In March, archaeologists criticized both IFG and KRG leaders' ongoing sectarianizing of cultural heritage sites, finding it amounts to cultural heritage predation. In the IFG, confessional political and religious groups leveraged the ethnic and religious political quota system, the Iraqi Constitution of 2005, and a collection of later laws, including religion-specific endowments, to misappropriate and alter the character of religious heritage sites. Meanwhile, the KRG's “land grabs” of indigenous Christians' villages and sites constituted a form of targeted demographic change, prompting continued displacement and migration.

In May, the Iraqi Parliament passed a Sadr-proposed law criminalizing Iraqis' and foreigners' ostensible attempts to normalize relations with Israel. The law did not address Judaism and set forth exceptions for Iraqis' “religious visits” to Israel as preapproved by the Ministry of the Interior. However, it not only potentially “[promot\[ed\] an environment of antisemitism](#)” but also reflected Iraq's rampant political sectarianism, with Shi'a parliamentary blocs advancing the legislation in part to distance themselves from Sunni Kurds' and Arabs' perceived receptivity to normalizing ties with Israel.

Key U.S. Policy

The administration of President Joseph R. Biden continued to prioritize Iraq's stabilization and economic development in U.S. relations with both the IFG and KRG.

In July, the United States condemned an attack on a resort in Duhok that killed at least eight civilians. The IFG attributed the strike to Turkey, which frequently carries out airstrikes in northern Iraq in ostensible pursuit of members of the terrorist-designated Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK). The strikes have contributed to the abandonment of nearby Christian villages, threatened already traumatized Yazidis in Duhok's displacement camps, and inhibited Yazidis' return to Sinjar. The United States maintained its “strong support for Iraq's sovereignty and its security, stability, and prosperity, including that of the Iraqi Kurdistan Region.”

The United States Agency for International Development asserted its commitment to providing financial assistance to help enable the approximately 1.67 million displaced Iraqis' return to their homes. In November, U.S. Ambassador to Iraq Alina L. Romanowski redeclared a disaster in Iraq for fiscal year 2023 “due to the ongoing complex emergency and humanitarian crisis.”

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Kazakhstan remained relatively the same as last year as the government failed to introduce meaningful reform and continued to restrict religious activity. In January, new amendments to the country's expansive religion law came into force that did not include substantive reforms and preserved many provisions that systematically violate freedom of religion or belief. Throughout the year, the government continued to prohibit unregistered religious activity, require state approval for religious literature, and restrict missionary activity, among other undue limitations.

The government continued to suppress groups and individuals it perceived as following "nontraditional" religions, along with Sunni Muslims who do not subscribe to the state's interpretation of Islam. By the end of the year, at least 10 Muslim men were still imprisoned on charges related to their online religious activity, including discussing their beliefs and sharing religious content. Those in prison include five men sentenced due to their participation in a WhatsApp conversation on Islam in 2019, despite a 2021 United Nations (UN) Working Group opinion that called for their release. In March, an Atyrau court found Sarsen Netekov and Nurlan Atalykov guilty of belonging to the Tablighi Jamaat movement, sentencing both men to a year of restricted freedom and blocking their bank accounts. In July, authorities imprisoned

Anatoli Zernichenko for posting excerpts from religious texts on his private Instagram page.

Kazakhstan also maintained an official ban on women and girls wearing a hijab in public schools in the face of continued calls by activists and parents to rescind the ban. In October, an Almaty school barred a Muslim schoolgirl who wears a hijab from attending class for a month, stating that religious garb did not comply with uniform regulations issued by the Ministry of Education. In addition, Ahmadiyya Muslims remained unregistered as a religious association due to official discrimination. As in years past, authorities issued over 140 administrative fines for religious offenses throughout 2022, primarily targeting Muslims.

Non-Muslim religious minorities, such as Jehovah's Witnesses and Protestant Christians, also encountered restrictions on religious activities, including raids on unauthorized meetings, negative publicity from state-sponsored groups, and forced official apologies for missionary activities. In a positive development, the official Financial Monitoring Agency removed several Jehovah's Witness associations and members of the Church of Scientology from a secret list of "high-risk" entities that prevented them from accessing banking services for the past few years. It remains unclear how many other organizations and individuals may be included on this list, as Protestant churches have reportedly experienced similar issues.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Include Kazakhstan on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Continue to engage with the government of Kazakhstan to revise the 2011 religion law, as amended in 2021, and other relevant legislation to comply with international human rights standards, including repealing or amending registration requirements, ending all expert mandatory review of religious materials, and removing or reducing administrative fines for religious activities;
 - Provide training to law enforcement and local officials in line with international human rights standards through programs such as the Workshop on Inclusive Governance to protect religious freedom; and
 - Call for Kazakhstan to release all those imprisoned due to their religious activities or beliefs immediately, permit all incarcerated individuals to practice their religion, and investigate and cease all torture.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Advocate for religious freedom reform and other measures aimed at improving the human rights landscape in Kazakhstan through the Congressional U.S.-Kazakhstan Caucus.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Issue Update: Kazakhstan's Religion Law Amendments
- Podcast: Religious Prisoners of Conscience in Kazakhstan
- Special Report: Tolerance, Religious Freedom, and Authoritarianism

Background

According to a 2021 census, Kazakhstan is home to more than 19 million people, with 69.3 percent of Kazakh citizens identifying as Muslim. Most Muslims in Kazakhstan are Sunni, although other sects of Islam—such as Shafi'i Sunni, Shi'a, Sufi, and Ahmadiyya groups—are also represented. Christians comprise 17.2 percent of the population and are mostly Russian Orthodox. Other Christian denominations include Catholics, Protestants, and Jehovah's Witnesses, among others. Eleven percent of Kazakhs did not indicate any religious affiliation, and two percent of Kazakhs are atheist. Additional religious groups represent about 0.2 percent of the population and include Jews, Buddhists, members of the International Society of Krishna Consciousness, Baha'is, Scientologists, and others.

The state gives preferential treatment to the Hanafi school of Sunni Islam and Russian Orthodoxy, recognizing the "historical role" of both in the country and placing them in the unofficial category of "traditional" religions. The government heavily regulates religious groups it considers "threatening," including Muslim groups, Evangelical Christians, and Jehovah's Witnesses, in an ostensible effort to combat extremism.

Religion Law Amendments

In December 2021, Kazakhstan passed amendments to its 2011 law, On Religious Activities and Religious Associations, which came into force in early January. After soliciting recommendations to improve religious freedom in the context of meetings carried out through the U.S.-Kazakhstan Religious Freedom Working Group, Kazakhstan adopted amendments touted as liberalizing but that included little notable reform. While the amendments included switching from a permission-based system to a "notification-based" system for religious groups seeking to hold events outside their registered place of worship, it changed little in practice. Religious groups are still effectively required to seek permission from local authorities and provide in-depth details about the nature of their event.

Authorities have applied the "notification" amendment to the regularly scheduled meetings of groups that rent their religious facilities. Authorities mostly enforced the amendment for larger meetings and events, such as when police disrupted the annual commemoration of Jesus Christ's death, a widely observed occasion, in three Jehovah's Witness communities across Kostanay region. Yet, in Aqmola region, police also disrupted a typical, smaller meeting of Jehovah's Witnesses. In all cases, authorities stated that no one submitted the required notification for the event.

Targeting of Muslims

The state often targets Sunni Muslims who practice Islam independently from the state, particularly for the distribution of religious materials and online religious activities. Officials often use questionable or false claims of "extremism" or terrorism charges to detain, arrest, and imprison Muslims. In particular, Kazakhstan continued to target individuals affiliated with the Tablighi Jamaat movement and other Muslim groups on its list of prohibited foreign organizations deemed extremist. Released prisoners have faced continued punishments and endure long bans on religious, social, and financial activities. Of the 10 individuals known to be imprisoned on such charges, all identify as Sunni Muslim. Despite the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention's 2021 opinion that called for the release of eight individuals jailed in 2019 for participating in a WhatsApp discussion about Islam, five of the men remained imprisoned at the end of 2022. In February, the Kyzylorda Regional Court rejected a petition for early release submitted by one of those men, Bolatbek Nurgaliyev, claiming he violated prison rules when he prayed in his free time.

In June, a local court sentenced Sunni Muslim Anatoli Zernichenko to seven years in prison on charges under Penal Code Article 256 for the "propaganda of terrorism or public calls to commit terrorism" after he posted religious content on social media. The court ordered that he pay a fine equivalent to six months' average local wages. The state relied on "expert" theological analysis to support the final verdict. In another case, reports claimed prison officials tortured religious prisoner Dadash Mazhenov, beating him and allegedly breaking his jaw.

Attitude toward China's Ongoing Genocide

Kazakhstan continued to hold an at-times ambiguous position with respect to neighboring China's ongoing genocide of Uyghurs and other ethnic Turkic Muslims. In an October session of the UN Human Rights Council, Kazakhstan voted against a motion to discuss human rights abuses against Uyghurs and Muslims in Xinjiang. Notably, the police continued to disrupt individuals protesting the detention of Uyghur and ethnic Kazakh family members in China. In mid-September, just prior to a state visit by Chinese President Xi Jinping, Kazakh authorities in Almaty region detained several protesters who regularly advocated for the Chinese government to release their relatives. Authorities charged those detained with violating the legal procedures for holding peaceful assemblies.

Key U.S. Policy

In 2022, while the United States and Kazakhstan collaborated on key issues regarding security, development, and human rights, engagement on religious freedom matters was less of a focus. The U.S. government continued to provide economic assistance through the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to strengthen Kazakhstan's capacity for governance in key areas, including the legal enabling environment, the energy sector, and the health sector. In May, Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asian Affairs Donald Lu traveled to Kazakhstan to meet with government officials and civil society and discuss President Kassym-Jomart Tokayev's reform agenda, human rights, and women's empowerment. In response to the government of Kazakhstan's violent management of protests in January 2022, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee called for an international investigation into the state-sponsored violence and a review of U.S. security assistance to the country in light of Kazakhstan's human rights abuses. In November, U.S. Department of State Spokesperson Ned Price noted that Kazakhstan's November presidential election lacked meaningful political competition; he also expressed U.S. government support for President Tokayev's proposed reforms, including protection of human rights. In December, both sides came together for the U.S.-Kazakhstan Enhanced Strategic Partnership Dialogue, where officials discussed human rights conditions in Kazakhstan. Public reporting did not indicate whether representatives discussed religious freedom issues.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Malaysia remained the same as in 2021. Article 160 of the constitution links Malay ethnicity with Islam, infringing on ethnic Malays' ability to choose their own religion. The government requires all citizens to obtain a religious identification card known as MyKad through the Ministry of Home Affairs (MOHA), which lists whether they are Muslims. Federal and state governments compel all citizens designated as Muslims to adhere to a strict, state-approved interpretation of Sunni Islam according to Shafi'i jurisprudence. This system essentially prevents Malaysians who are officially labeled as Muslims from changing their religion, with only a few exceptions in recent years involving lengthy court processes. Although the National Registration Department—under MOHA's jurisdiction and responsible for MyKad—is not affiliated with any religious office, it must obtain approval from Islamic affairs departments at the state and/or national level to change a registered Muslim's designation.

Malaysia's Penal Code Sections 298 and 298A criminalize blasphemy, and government authorities use Section 233 of the Communications and Multimedia Act of 1998 (CMA) in effect as a blasphemy law as well. At least five states criminalize apostasy with fines, imprisonment, or detention in a "rehabilitation" center. Politicians have consistently supported these restrictions, including during 2022. In January, Ahmad Marzuk Shaary, deputy minister in the prime minister's Department of Religious Affairs, confirmed the intent of the federal Department of Islamic Development (JAKIM) to continue monitoring online posts for blasphemy. In July, the Federal Territories Islamic Religious Department detained Siti Nuramira Abdullah under Article 298 for allegedly insulting Islam by removing religious attire at the Crackhouse Comedy Club in Kuala Lumpur. One of the club's founders, Rizal Van Geysel, was arrested under Section 4(1) of the Sedition Act and Section 233 of the CMA.

Malaysia maintains a dual legal system that devolves the maintenance and regulation of Shari'a (known domestically as Syariah) to individual state or federal departments. State-led religious departments coordinate with the security services to control and enforce the affairs of Muslims to varying degrees depending on the state, creating restrictions on religious freedom for both Muslim and non-Muslim residents. For example, in early December, Terengganu's state government passed amendments to its Syariah Code which, among other restrictions, placed new regulations on attire for men and women and criminalized pregnancy out of wedlock. Islamic affairs departments and some politicians justified using Syariah Codes to restrict human rights and individual freedoms as an effort to "protect the well-being" of Muslims.

The phenomenon of unilateral conversions—when a parent converts to Islam and then converts their child, often in an apparent attempt to win custody following a divorce—remains a persistent issue in Malaysia. Children of these conversions who do not identify as Muslim are forced to endure lengthy legal proceedings to change their designated religion to coincide with their beliefs. In February, Loh Siew Hong regained custody of her three children, who had been unilaterally converted by their father. In April, a High Court decision finally allowed an unidentified woman to change her religion, concluding an eight-year legal struggle to overturn her unilateral conversion by her father when she was four years old.

Throughout 2022, the government of Malaysia continued to withhold the 2019 Special Taskforce's report examining cases of enforced disappearances, including Pastor Raymond Koh, Amri Che Mat, and others. Malaysian security forces and religious affairs departments likely targeted these individuals, at least in part, for their religious identity and practices.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Include Malaysia on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
- Raise at every opportunity with the Malaysian government that it should:
 - Ratify international treaties on human rights that directly or indirectly impact religious freedom, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

- Ratify the 1951 Covenant on Refugees and/or develop a law to regulate the Malaysian government's response and obligations to refugees and asylum seekers, many of whom have fled religious persecution in their home countries;
- Release the Special Taskforce's report investigating cases of enforced disappearances; and

- Prioritize raising religious freedom concerns in all bilateral engagement with Malaysia, including through a visit by the Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom with official counterparts and religious leaders in Malaysia.

The U.S. Congress should:

- Raise Malaysia's ongoing religious freedom concerns in all bilateral engagement, hearings, meetings, letters, congressional delegation trips abroad, and other actions.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Commission Delegation Visit: Kuala Lumpur in November 2022
- Podcast: The Impact of Malaysia's Dual Legal System on Religious Freedom
- Factsheet: Blasphemy and Related Laws in ASEAN Member Countries

Background

Malaysia is a highly pluralistic society. Around 61.3 percent of the population identify as Muslim, the vast majority of whom adhere to state-sponsored Sunni Islam. Buddhists comprise 19.8 percent; 9.2 percent are Christian; 6.3 percent are Hindu; 1.3 percent practice Confucianism, Taoism, and other traditional Chinese religions; and about 0.8 percent identify with no religion. Although Malaysia was founded as a secular state, Article 3 of the 1957 Constitution places Islam—interpreted as Sunni Islam—as the federation’s official religion. Article 11(4) provides that state and federal law “may control or restrict the propagation of any religious doctrine or beliefs among persons professing the religion of Islam.”

Rising Islamism and Its Mainstreaming throughout Malaysia

In 2022, Malaysia’s Malay-majority population, other Muslim communities, and both federal and state institutions continued to experience increased Islamization. Despite a constitutional ban on hudud (corporal punishments), several states, including Kelantan, Kedah, and Terengganu, have incorporated them into their legal system to be implemented if the federal ban is removed. Then Prime Minister Ismail Sabri Yaakob’s administration worked to elevate the position of tahfiz institutions—religious schools that are not obliged to provide formal, nonreligious education alongside their instruction—through legislation to standardize their curriculum and regulations. Around 1,200 such schools exist throughout the country and have played a role in introducing Malay students to Islamist ideology, heightening the influence of fundamentalist interpretations of Islam, and increasing the risk for radical Islamist groups to establish a presence.

The increased role of Islamist rhetoric and ideology was also present in the Islamic Party’s (PAS) political calls for the strengthening of Syariah and religiously based laws throughout Malaysia. PAS’s coalition earned second place during the 2022 general elections (GE15) in November. In its outreach, PAS utilized social media platforms such as TikTok to spread hateful and inflammatory messages against non-Muslims to motivate its electoral base. Malaysia’s Islamist populist parties have used social media to stoke religious and populist sentiment against what they characterize as plots to Christianize the country or take rights and privileges away from Muslim Malay communities. GE15 witnessed the collapse of support among ethnic Malays for the traditional United Malay National Organization and a realignment of most of this demographic behind PAS. During the elections, multiple political actors exploited ethnic and religious concerns in their efforts to mobilize Malay Muslim and other Muslim Bumiputra voters. In November, King Al-Sultan Abdullah called upon longtime opposition figure Anwar Ibrahim to form a national unity government with some ideologically and geographically disparate parties.

Dual Legal System and State Control of Muslims

Malaysia’s federal and state governments use the country’s dual legal system to regulate and control the Muslim population. This system emerged in the 1990s and coincided with a rapid bureaucratization of religion. States where PAS controls the government require individuals to live their lives in accordance with a rigid interpretation of Islam, regardless of their religious belief. They enforce clothing restrictions for men and women and prohibit indigenous practices, such as dancing, and other clothing deemed haram (forbidden).

Malaysia’s state-level Syariah systems also place undue burden on Muslim members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and intersex (LGBTQI+) community. In several states, religiously based laws criminalize sexual relations for LGBTQI+ people and permit caning and imprisonment as punishment. In October, JAKIM officers joined the police in raiding a Halloween-themed party in Kuala Lumpur for the local LGBTQI+ community, detaining only those whose MyKad cards identified them as Muslims. LGBTQI+ community members in other parts of the country reported similar incidents in 2022, indicating that local authorities have repeatedly attempted to disrupt LGBTQI+ events under the pretext of preventing Muslims from attending. Furthermore, the JAKIM, in coordination with its state-level counterparts, continued to organize mukharyams (conversion therapy camps) to target and compel Muslim members of the LGBTQI+ community to undergo “rehabilitation.” The government reported that it had subjected at least 1,733 LGBTQI+ people to these programs in 2021, but it has not released numbers for 2022.

Refugees and Asylum Seekers

Malaysia hosts significant numbers of refugees and asylum seekers fleeing violations of religious freedom, such as religious minorities from Burma, Afghanistan, and Pakistan. Since Malaysia is not party to the 1951 Covenant on Refugees, it effectively leaves those fleeing religious persecution and in search of refugee status in a grey legal area, void of protection.

Key U.S. Policy

The United States is Malaysia’s third-largest trading partner, and the two countries maintain strong bilateral ties. In March, U.S. Secretary of State Antony J. Blinken spoke with then Foreign Minister Saifuddin Abdullah via phone to strengthen bilateral relations. The United States maintains a deep, institutionalized, bilateral military relationship with Malaysia and regularly engages in joint military exercises. The two countries continued to partner on counterterrorism efforts through information sharing, capacity-building programs for law enforcement and judicial authorities, and assistance to improve immigration security and border controls. The United States also works with Malaysia through regional organizations such as the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN). However, neither religious freedom nor broader human rights issues have played a substantial, visible role in such engagement.

Through both the International Visiting Leadership Program and the Young Southeast Asian Leaders Initiative, the United States hosts leaders from Malaysia in programs that often include religious freedom issues. The United States is actively engaged with civil society in Malaysia to promote tolerance and counter violent extremism. In August, then Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) visited Kuala Lumpur, accompanied by a congressional delegation, where she praised Malaysia for its “leadership in ASEAN on repudiating Burma for its deadly crackdown on dissent.”

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Sri Lanka continued on a worrying trajectory. The Sri Lankan government targeted the rights of religious minorities, particularly Muslims and Hindus, by using problematic legislation, engaging in discrimination against them, and instigating land disputes intended to expropriate their property. Authorities harassed and imprisoned religious actors associated with the protest movement in 2022 (Aragalaya, or “Struggle” in Sinhala) and intimidated members of minority religious communities. Muslims who posted supportive messages for protesters on social media were identified, questioned, and arrested under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) Act. During the year, Sri Lanka faced an economic and political crisis resulting in a lack of basic necessities. The Aragalaya called for accountability for corruption and economic mismanagement, leading to the resignation of then President Gotabaya Rajapaksa in May and the election of former Prime Minister Ranil Wickremesinghe as president in July.

The 1979 Prevention of Terrorism Act (PTA) gives Sri Lankan authorities broad powers to search, arrest, and detain individuals. Nearly 300 Muslim men and women remained in detention without charges in connection to the 2019 Easter Sunday bombings (a series of coordinated “bomb blasts that ripped through churches and luxury hotels” that killed over 200 people) based on a combination of the PTA, the ICCPR Act, and/or the penal code. The PTA and the ICCPR Act (designed to incorporate the international treaty into domestic law) often are used to restrict freedom of expression among minority groups. Authorities also utilized the PTA to crack down on Aragalaya protesters. In August, police dispersed a protest using tear gas and water cannons and arrested three students, including Galwewa Siridhamma Thero, a Buddhist monk and organizer of the Inter University Bhikku (Monks’) Federation. President Wickremesinghe signed an order that the three men could be held for 90 days without evidence or the opportunity to seek bail. The United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on human rights defenders expressed support for the three men. The government released Siridhamma Thero on bail in December.

The government published proposed amendments to the PTA in January, but experts assessed that the amendments did not go far enough in addressing the worst aspects of the act. In September, the UN Human Rights Council (UNHRC) published a report on the human rights situation in Sri Lanka. Nada Al-Nashif, then UN Acting High Commissioner for Human Rights, urged the government to repeal the PTA and draft a new counterterrorism law in its place.

The Sri Lankan government discriminated against Muslims and targeted the practice of Islam. In August, the Ministry of Defense announced the addition of several Tamil and Muslim groups and individuals to a list of designated persons accused of “terrorism related activities” and/or “funding for terrorism” under the country’s UN Regulations No. 1 of 2012. The list included a single mother of two who subsequently lost her job, a business owner who sits on a local-level peace commission, and Muslim poet Ahnaf Jazeem. Organizations included on these kinds of lists often have their assets and bank accounts frozen. Inclusion on such lists is used to intimidate different communities and disproportionately targets religious minorities. The government also closely monitored the affairs and finances of Muslim organizations, particularly those that receive foreign donations. Such surveillance impacts Muslim organizations dedicated to the alms-giving pillar of Islam, known as zakat; for example, groups wishing to donate money to the families of PTA/ICCPR Act detainees must inform the Terrorism Investigation Division to do so.

The Sri Lankan Ministry of Defense previously decreed that all imported Islamic books are subject to review and will only be released following approval from the ministry to protect against “terrorism.” Reports indicate that this practice is ongoing and affects all reading material with Arabic script, Qur’anic translations, and material related to Islamic education. The Ministry of Education recalled Islamic textbooks for several grades after the discredited Presidential Task Force for “One Country, One Law” raised concerns over unspecified “objectionable words” and claimed “they might contain ideas of extremist ideology.”

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Include Sri Lanka on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Direct U.S. Embassy officials to urge the Sri Lankan government to repeal or significantly reform the PTA and other laws that disproportionately affect religious and ethnic minorities; and
 - Advocate for the full implementation of UNHRC Resolution 51/1 to promote reconciliation, accountability, and religious freedom and other related human rights in Sri Lanka.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Hold public hearings highlighting religious freedom conditions in Sri Lanka and U.S. policy toward Sri Lanka.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Country Update: Religious Freedom Conditions in Sri Lanka
- Podcast: Troubling Signs for Religious Freedom in Sri Lanka

Background

The Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka is a presidential republic with a unicameral parliament. President Wickremesinghe serves as chief of state and head of government, having previously served as prime minister for five separate terms between 1993 and 2020. Under Article 9 of the Sri Lankan constitution, Buddhism is afforded special status. The state is directed to “protect and foster” Buddhism, which holds the “foremost place” within the country. The constitution also guarantees the freedom of religion or belief in subsequent articles.

Sri Lanka is both religiously and ethnically diverse. Buddhists account for about 70 percent of the population, followed by Hindus at 12.6 percent, Muslims (mostly Sunni) at 9.7 percent, Roman Catholics at 6.1 percent, other Christians at 1.3 percent, and adherents of “other” religions at about 0.05 percent. Most Sri Lankans are Sinhalese, a majority of whom are Buddhist. The second-largest ethnic group, Sri Lankan Tamils, are mostly Hindu with a significant Christian minority. Members of the next-smallest ethnic group are traditionally called Sri Lankan Moors, who are mostly Muslim and eschew formal ethnic classification. Also included are Indian Tamils and a small number of other ethnicities.

Land Disputes

The Ministry of Defense heads the Task Force for Archaeological Heritage Management in the Eastern Province and works in collaboration with the Archaeological Department, security agencies, and Buddhist clergies to “identify archaeological monuments and facilitate the repair or construction of Buddhist sites.” In some cases, this collaboration has led to the expropriation of Hindu and Muslim sites where there were formerly no Buddhist populations, leading to fears that the program is transforming the region’s demographic landscape.

The National Christian Evangelical Alliance of Sri Lanka (NCEASL) documented several incidents involving the appropriation of Hindu temples between January and August, ranging from the removal of Hindu flags at a temple by unknown persons to erecting statues of Buddha on Hindu temple sites. In June, Buddhist monks and the Sri Lankan Army attempted to dedicate a new Buddhist shrine in Mullaitivu despite a 2018 court order prohibiting any new building in the area. The same court ordered the removal of new structures in July. Government authorities filed a motion asking for the court to reconsider the order, arguing that the new structure was meant to preserve archaeological materials and that demolishing the building would create interreligious tensions. That same day, a judge revised the previous order, specifying that the building could remain but that no further construction could take place.

Muslim Marriage and Divorce Act

The Muslim Marriage and Divorce Act (MMDA) governs marriage, divorce, and other family law matters for all Muslim Sri Lankans and is based on Shari’a law, Islamic legal practice, and local customs. The MMDA established a tax-funded Muslim judge (Quazi) court system, including a Board of Quazis and an Advisory Board. Muslim couples can only marry under the MMDA.

Observers argue that the MMDA is discriminatory toward Muslim women and is in violation of domestic and international human rights law, as it does not provide them with the same rights and protections afforded to women in other religious communities in Sri Lanka. The MMDA does not require a woman’s consent before the registration of a marriage, allows for unilateral divorce by the husband without giving the same right to the wife, presents bureaucratic hurdles to women seeking divorce that are not required for men, and allows the arbitrary provision for wife and child maintenance by a Quazi, among other problematic practices. Additionally, the MMDA lacks a minimum age for marriage, providing Quazis the ability to permit marriage of a girl younger than 12 years old, despite common law requiring an age minimum of 18 years old.

Harassment of Religious Actors Participating in the Aragalaya

Catholic priest Father Amila Jeewantha Peiris was heavily involved in the protests in Galle Face. In July, a court imposed a travel ban on him for alleged participation in “unlawful assembly and damage to public property” during a protest in June. Later in July, police raided Father Peiris’s church in the southern city of Balangoda, seeking his arrest. Authorities claimed he was liable for “being part of an unlawful assembly, obstructing public employees from performing duties, criminal assault and causing hurt.” Father Peiris later filed a fundamental rights petition with the Supreme Court to prevent his arrest, but he eventually surrendered to the court and posted bail.

Key U.S. Policy

The United States is Sri Lanka’s largest export market, accounting for almost 25 percent of Sri Lankan exports. U.S. policy toward Sri Lanka has historically focused on “supporting Sri Lanka’s democratic institutions, encouraging economic development, and promoting human rights.” In December, the U.S. Department of State announced nearly $240 million in new U.S. government assistance to support Sri Lanka during its acute economic crisis.

In May, the State Department twice condemned violence against Aragalaya protesters and expressed concern about state of emergency declarations, which “can be used to curb dissent.” In a June call with then Prime Minister Ranil Wickremesinghe, U.S. Secretary of State Antony J. Blinken affirmed “the United States’ commitment to the Sri Lankan people during this challenging time and the importance of supporting reforms that address the concerns of all Sri Lankans, including on democratic governance and human rights.” U.S. Ambassador to Sri Lanka Julie J. Chung condemned the use of the PTA against Sri Lankans expressing their views.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Turkey remained fairly consistent overall but did see some slight improvements. In June, the government finally released long-awaited regulations for religious minority foundations' board member elections. The government's failure to provide these regulations had prevented religious minority communities from electing foundation leadership for the last nine years. While the issuance of the regulations represented a positive development for the ability of some groups to operate, some critics panned the procedure as another means to "perpetuate state control" over non-Muslim communities. Although an April decision by the Constitutional Court ruled that schools' refusal to exempt children from mandatory religious classes violated freedom of religion or belief, the government took no apparent action to remedy the situation. On the contrary, schools reportedly pushed Kurdish students who wanted to enroll in Kurdish language courses to take religious classes instead. During the year, the government also took no steps to grant legal personality to religious communities, permit conscientious objection to mandatory military service, or reopen the Theological School of Halki or any other seminary.

The Turkish government continued to discriminate against Alevis and refuse to recognize their places of worship, known as cemevis. In February, Alevis protested the government's discriminatory policy of charging utility fees for their places of worship and not others, like mosques. That same month, President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan announced that the government would reduce the fees by classifying cemevis as residences rather than commercial establishments, but notably it did not categorize them as places of worship. In October, President Erdoğan announced the creation of a state-run "Alevi-Bektaşî Culture and Cemevi Directorate" to allegedly address the community's issues; however, many Alevis criticized the move as a means to subject Alevism to government authority and promote their assimilation to Sunni Islam. Alevis also continued to experience targeted violence throughout the year. In July, coinciding with the beginning of the holy month of Muharrem, several individuals conducted a string of attacks on Alevi places of worship and associations, with one assailant reportedly stabbing a woman who had to be hospitalized. Days later, two men physically assaulted Selami Sarıtaş, the leader of an Istanbul cemevi.

Other religious communities, including Christians and Jews, also experienced instances of societal violence, intimidation, and the destruction or vandalism of their religious sites over the course of the year. In June, several persons attacked a Syrian family related to an alleged land dispute while the family hosted Syrian clergy members in their house. In July, vandals destroyed 36 headstones in the Jewish Hasköy cemetery in Istanbul. Remnants of the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS)—which maintained a presence in Turkey—continued to pose a threat to religious minorities. Alleged ISIS members reportedly planned to carry out attacks on Alevis and an Ankara cemevi, and after the reporting period, additional plots to attack churches and synagogues also came to light.

The Turkish government continued to criminalize blasphemy or "insulting religious values" under Article 216(3) of the Penal Code, frequently levying such charges to crack down on criticism of the government and expression perceived as offensive to Islam. Throughout the year, numerous individuals and entities faced prosecution or investigation on criminal blasphemy charges, including Turkish pop singer Sezen Aksu and Swedish music streaming service Spotify.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Include Turkey on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Raise in all meetings with Turkish government officials and press at the highest levels for the reopening of the Theological School of Halki (Halki Seminary) and for full compliance with European Court of Human Rights rulings on freedom of religion or belief; and
 - Track and comprehensively document in the U.S. Department of State's International Religious Freedom Report religious communities' efforts to open, regain, renovate, and protect places of worship and other religious sites of spiritual, cultural, or historical importance; include information on the vandalism, damage, and destruction of such sites; and work with the Turkish government to ensure their protection.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Incorporate consideration of Turkey's treatment of religious minorities and broader human rights issues into its continued evaluation of the U.S.-Turkey bilateral relationship, including in the context of proposed legislation.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Staff Visit: Istanbul, Ankara, Diyarbakır, and Mardin in March 2022
- Issue Update: Blasphemy Charges in Turkey
- Podcast: Conditions for Religious and Nonbelief Communities in Turkey
- Podcast: The Alevi Struggle for Rights in Turkey

Background

The U.S. government estimates the population of Turkey at just over 83 million. The Turkish government has claimed that 99 percent of the population is Muslim, with 78 percent reportedly identifying as Hanafi Sunni. Between 10 million and 25 million people identify as Alevi, the country's largest religious minority, and there is also a small population of Shi'a Muslims. An estimated 0.2 percent of the population comprises atheists, Armenian Apostolics, Baha'is, Bulgarian Orthodox, Chaldean Catholics, Greek Orthodox, Jehovah's Witnesses, Jews, Protestants, Roman Catholics, Russian Orthodox, Syriac Catholics, Syriac Orthodox, Yazidis, and others.

The constitution defines Turkey as a secular (laik) state and provides for the freedom of conscience, religious belief, and conviction. Despite these provisions, the government maintained an active role in religious affairs, directly overseeing the practice of Islam through the official Directorate of Religious Affairs, or Diyanet, and managing the affairs of other religious communities through the General Directorate of Foundations (Vakıflar Genel Müdürlüğü).

The overall situation for human rights in Turkey continued to decline amid the government's ongoing targeting of political opponents, censorship of media, and alleged use of torture. The downward trajectory of recent years led Human Rights Watch to assert that "the authoritarian and highly centralized presidential government of Recep Tayyip Erdoğan has set back Turkey's human rights record by decades." In June, the European Parliament adopted a report that reiterated serious human rights concerns and called on Turkey to address persistent religious freedom issues such as: lack of legal personality for religious communities, compulsory religious education, failure to recognize Alevis and their places of worship, restrictions on the training and succession of clergy, and the continued closure of Halki Seminary. According to reports, Turkey also rejected the citizenship applications of some Uyghurs due to purported "national security" and "public order" risks.

Foundation Elections and Other Discriminatory Policies

The government has regularly inserted itself in the internal affairs of religious communities, interfered in leadership elections, and prevented religious minorities from opening places of worship and training facilities for religious leaders. For the last nine years, the many religious minority communities that manage their affairs through foundations have been unable to elect new leadership due to the government's refusal to issue regulations for those elections. Finally, in June, the government published those regulations but included a new residency requirement for candidates competing in parts of Istanbul, generating concerns that it would limit participation. Armenian Patriarch Sahak Maşalyan stated that the patriarchate did not know why religious communities had to wait so long to hold elections, and Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew criticized the extended delay as a "great injustice" and expressed his disappointment that the state did not heed the communities' appeals on various elements of the regulations.

In June, a citizen won a lawsuit to have information included on his national identification card to reflect Tengrism as his religion instead of Islam, after the Ministry of Interior reportedly denied his initial request.

Charges of Blasphemy

Turkish authorities continued to rely on blasphemy charges to penalize individuals considered critical of the government or perceived to have "insulted" Islam. In January, a group lodged a complaint against pop singer Sezen Aksu on such charges after she posted a clip of a five-year-old song to YouTube in which she referred to the religious figures of Adam and Eve as "ignorant." In a thinly veiled reference to Aksu, President Erdoğan threatened to "tear out those tongues," while the Diyanet warned citizens "to be extremely sensitive and careful in every sentence, statement and approach made about the distinguished, leading, and exemplary figures of Islam." In August, the Istanbul Chief Public Prosecutor's Office announced an investigation into Spotify after complaints emerged that users had created "insulting" playlist names such as "God's Ringtone," "Songs God listened to while exiling Adam from paradise," and "Eve didn't hear when God announced the forbidden fruit [because she was] listening to this playlist," among others. In September, authorities began an investigation against a scholar and atheist who called certain religious figures "fairy tales." Yet another individual was indicted on incitement charges after he posted a photo during the holy month of Ramadan of himself and others drinking alcohol captioned with the phrase "may the lord accept."

Key U.S. Policy

The United States and Turkey continued to cooperate closely on matters related to security and economic relations. With the launch of Russia's full-scale invasion and war against Ukraine, the U.S. government increasingly engaged with the Turkish government—which has attempted to position itself as a potential mediator to the conflict—on efforts to assist Ukraine. In April, the United States and Turkey launched the U.S.-Turkey Strategic Mechanism, which convened three times throughout the year to review aspects of the bilateral relationship such as trade, defense cooperation, and counterterrorism. During the year, the State Department condemned Turkey's unjust convictions and sentencing of philanthropist Osman Kavala and Istanbul Mayor Ekrem İmamoğlu.

The U.S. government continued to raise religious freedom concerns in Turkey. In September, Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom Rashad Hussain traveled to Turkey, where he met with Turkish officials including the Spokesperson and Chief Advisor to the President İbrahim Kalın and President of Religious Affairs Ali Erbaş. Public messaging, however, indicated a greater focus on refugees and individuals fleeing religious persecution in other countries than on Turkey's own religious freedom violations. U.S. Ambassador to Turkey Jeffrey L. Flake also met with representatives of various religious communities.

UZBEKISTAN

USCIRF–RECOMMENDED FOR SPECIAL WATCH LIST

KEY FINDINGS

In 2022, religious freedom conditions in Uzbekistan trended slightly positively in a few areas, although most concerns related to the fundamental protection of this right remained. The government continued to severely restrict freedom of religion or belief through its 1998 law On Freedom of Conscience and Religious Organizations, as amended in 2021, which requires religious groups to obtain registration to engage in religious activity and prohibits unregistered religious activity, the private teaching of religion, missionary activity, and proselytism, in addition to other undue restrictions. Although the government allowed the opening of some new mosques and registered a handful of religious minority communities—including three Protestant Christian churches and one Shi’a Muslim mosque—the registration process remained a burdensome and insurmountable challenge to other religious minority communities. Local governments and mahallas (local neighborhood committees) still arbitrarily blocked some registration applications submitted by Jehovah’s Witnesses and Protestant Christians.

While the government continued to issue sporadic pardons that resulted in the release of some individuals convicted in connection with their peaceful religious activities, more than 2,000 Muslims remained imprisoned on various charges of “extremism” and other related offenses. Throughout the year, authorities continued to detain, arrest, imprison, and ill-treat Muslims for distributing unauthorized or illegal religious materials, criticizing state-approved imams, holding prayers in unsanctioned areas, and leading informal classes on Islam without government permission. Law enforcement authorities conducted raids against and detained alleged members of the Islamic group Hizb ut-Tahrir for meeting to discuss religious texts or sharing such texts online. In July, a local court in Bukhara sentenced Muslim Bobirjon Tukhtamurodov, who studied the works of Muslim theologian Said Nursi, to more than five years in prison for allegedly recruiting youth to the so-called “Nurchilar” group. In another case, Muslim blogger Fazilhoja Arifhojaev received a seven-and-a-half-year prison sentence in January after he reshared a Facebook post that stated that Muslims should not congratulate non-Muslims on their religious holidays. According to Human Rights Watch, Arifhojaev’s lawyer said that his client experienced ill-treatment and torture while in police custody. USCIRF received reports throughout the year that Uzbekistan pursued individuals who had fled abroad on religiously motivated charges and requested their extradition. In an apparent effort to suppress information, Uzbekistan’s State Security Service (Davlat Xavfsizlik Xizmati) also intimidated human rights activists documenting the country’s ongoing religious freedom violations—including during USCIRF’s commissioner delegation visit—and reportedly warned journalists against reporting on such issues.

Authorities sought to limit some elements of Islam and Islamic practice unofficially considered inappropriate. For instance, in May police in two districts of Tashkent rounded up at least 10 men and threatened them with arrest if they refused to have their beards shaved, drawing criticism from the U.S. ambassador to Uzbekistan. Similarly, officials have harassed women and girls who wear the hijab and maintained that only a “light-colored national headscarf” may be worn in schools. Despite a public announcement made in recent years that children can attend mosques, in April security officials in the exclave of So’x (or Sokh) reportedly raided and drove out children from the Hazrati Ali mosque during the holy month of Ramadan. Authorities allegedly dissuaded or hindered attempts by Muslims to reopen previously closed places of worship, such as the Abu Zar mosque and the Nazira Bibi Xonim mosque in Tashkent, and required Muslims interested in performing the Hajj or Umra pilgrimages to apply to their mahalla.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

- Include Uzbekistan on the Special Watch List for engaging in or tolerating severe violations of religious freedom pursuant to the International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA);
 - Work with the government of Uzbekistan to revise the 1998 religion law, as amended in 2021, and other relevant legislation to comply with international human rights standards, including by removing registration requirements on religious communities, permitting the possession and distribution of religious literature, and permitting the sharing of religious beliefs;
 - Press at the highest levels for the immediate release of individuals imprisoned for their peaceful religious activities or religious affiliations, and press the government of Uzbekistan to treat prisoners humanely and allow for independent prison monitoring; and
 - Allocate funding for the U.S. Agency for International Development and U.S. Embassy in Tashkent to provide litigation support to individuals and religious communities prosecuted in connection with their peaceful religious activities.
- The U.S. Congress should:
- Advocate on behalf of individuals imprisoned for their peaceful religious activities or religious affiliations through letters, floor speeches, hearings, delegations, and other engagements with or about Uzbekistan.

KEY USCIRF RESOURCES & ACTIVITIES

- Commission Delegation Visit: Tashkent and Bukhara in April 2022
- Country Update: Uzbekistan: Space for Reform
- Podcast: Uzbekistan: Gaps in Principles and Practice

Background

The government of Uzbekistan estimates the country's population at nearly 35 million people. Varying estimates assess that between 88 and 96 percent of people identify as Sunni Muslim; one percent identify as Shi'a Muslim; 2.2 percent identify as Russian Orthodox; and 1.6 percent identify as atheist, Baha'i, Buddhist, Catholic, Jehovah's Witness, Jewish, Protestant, or a member of the International Society of Krishna Consciousness.

Uzbekistan's reform agenda related to religious freedom slowed in 2022 relative to previous years, although the government introduced additional legislative and other policy changes that alternately represented positive and negative developments for freedom of religion or belief. At the beginning of the year, Uzbekistan signaled its intent to abolish administrative fines for wearing religious attire in public after formally dropping the ban previously included in the country's religion law. Meanwhile, in June the government adopted a new law on advertising that prohibits "disrespect for traditional symbols of the country," including religious symbols. In the foreign policy sphere, in October Uzbekistan voted against the United Nations Human Rights Council holding a debate on China's human rights abuses perpetrated against Uyghurs and other Muslim minorities in Xinjiang.

Fines, Detention, and Arrest of Muslims

Uzbekistan continued to repress Muslims whose independent religious practice violated the country's religious regulations and whose actions the government equated with "extremism" or "religious fundamentalism." For example, in several instances courts handed down fines to Muslims who held or permitted prayers in unauthorized locations such as businesses. In January, law enforcement raided the business of Farhod Rahmonov because he allowed his employees to pray at their place of work. The next month, a local Tashkent court fined him the equivalent of $1,982 (21,600,000 So'm). In March, a court jailed Nosir Numanov for 15 days after he performed Friday prayers in a teahouse with a group of friends. The court also fined the teahouse owner approximately $2,473 (27,000,000 So'm).

Likewise, authorities routinely cracked down on Muslims for illegal possession or distribution of religious texts. According to non-governmental organization Forum 18, in January and February police arrested as many as 24 men for keeping "extremist" religious content on their phones. In April, a judge sentenced Hasan Abdirahimov to four years in prison for "liking" and sharing religious materials online; he was already serving a previous sentence for listening to banned sermons. In May, Oybek Hamidov received five years in prison after he shared an audio file of a sermon. That same month, a court sentenced Alimardon Sultonov to seven years in a labor camp on numerous charges, including storage of materials with "religious extremism," despite claims he had experienced torture. His family has asserted he was arrested due to his criticism of state-appointed imams, among other public figures.

Women are also targeted, often in connection with their collective religious activity. Following a raid in the beginning of the year, police accused four women of teaching Islam without official permission and fined each around $124 (1,350,000 So'm). In January, officials detained another 12 women—who had gathered in a private home for religious readings—on charges of Hizb ut-Tahrir membership.

Persistent Obstacles for Religious Minorities

Despite the passage of a revised religion law with a supposedly streamlined registration process in July 2021, few non-Muslim religious communities have managed to obtain the legally required registration. Only two Pentecostal churches and one Evangelical church received registration in June and September 2022, respectively, since the adoption of those amendments. Numerous religious communities that have sought registration in recent years remained unregistered by year's end.

Various communities reported to USCIRF that they were often required to inform the government of their activities, that they limited some practices in light of the continued bans on proselytism and missionary activity, and that some still could not import religious literature. In a few instances, police subjected Jehovah's Witnesses to interrogation, seized their possessions, threatened them with fines for sharing their beliefs, and in one case searched an individual's private home. Forum 18 reported that in early 2022, the Ministry of Internal Affairs ordered non-Muslim religious communities to install surveillance cameras in their places of worship, causing some members to cease attending services amid fears of possible retaliation.

Key U.S. Policy

As in recent years, the United States and Uzbekistan took steps to build closer relations in 2022, an effort exemplified by the number of high-level visits paid by both countries to the other throughout the year. For example, Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asian Affairs Donald Lu traveled to Tashkent twice, in May and November, to "advance our support for . . . freedom of religion or belief," among other priorities. In August, a congressional delegation that included Representative Trent Kelly (R-MS), cochair of the Uzbekistan Caucus, and Representative Darin LaHood (R-IL) also visited to discuss bilateral relations.

The U.S. government continued to prioritize religious freedom concerns in the country at all levels of engagement. In December, Secretary of State Antony J. Blinken met with Foreign Minister Vladimir Norov on the occasion of the two countries' annual Strategic Partnership Dialogue, where Secretary Blinken highlighted his appreciation for "the work being done on reforms, including on religious freedom." Similarly, visiting delegations from Uzbekistan regularly interacted with the U.S. Department of State's Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom Rashad Hussain and Under Secretary for Civilian Security, Democracy, and Human Rights Uzra Zeya to discuss freedom of religion or belief. Then U.S. Ambassador to Uzbekistan Daniel N. Rosenblum frequently raised religious freedom issues in his meetings and other public fora.

OTHER KEY DEVELOPMENTS

This section highlights some important developments and trends that impacted religious freedom conditions around the world in 2022, particularly—but not only—in countries and regions not covered elsewhere in this report.

Transnational Repression and Influence by Religious Freedom Violators

While abuser governments perpetrate most religious freedom violations within their own countries, several authoritarian governments often and insidiously seek to extend their religious repression beyond their borders.

The Chinese government continued its transnational repression campaigns throughout 2022, targeting ethnic and religious minorities, human rights activists, and others living in diaspora. It used its economic and geopolitical influence to pressure foreign countries, including majority-Muslim countries such as Saudi Arabia, Egypt, the United Arab Emirates, and Kazakhstan to repatriate Uyghurs, Kazakhs, and others—sometimes through the use of Interpol Red Notices. The Chinese government also harassed and intimidated victims by threatening their family members in China and by sending or recruiting undercover agents to conduct transnational repression activities abroad on its behalf, including in the United States. Reports emerged during the year revealing that China operates more than 100 overseas “police service stations” in at least 53 countries, including one in New York City—causing concerns about their use to harass and intimidate ethnic minorities and dissidents abroad, including Uyghurs and Tibetans. In Thailand, approximately 60 members of the Protestant Shenzhen Holy Reformed Church, over 50 Uyghurs, and an ethnic Mongolian activist have experienced ongoing harassment and intimidation by Chinese officials operating in that country and remained in fear of repatriation to China.

Iran’s government continued to pursue religious minorities and those challenging the legal imposition of its religious interpretations on Iranians without their consent. In Germany, the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC) has overseen shooting and arson attacks on synagogues. Religious minorities from Iran who fled to Turkey and Europe faced threats and harassment from the IRGC on the basis of their faith. Iranians seeking asylum in Turkey from religiously grounded laws in their home country faced an ongoing threat of deportation and severe consequences. In some cases, Iran’s repression of individuals who oppose its religiously grounded laws occurred on U.S. soil; in early 2023, just after the reporting period, the U.S. Department of Justice announced details of an Iranian government conspiracy to kidnap and return to Iran a Brooklyn-based Iranian American woman whose activism opposes mandatory hijab laws and other religious restrictions by Iran’s government.

Regarding other countries, Saudi Arabia also engaged in transnational repression, including the monitoring of religious dissidents. In August, a U.S. court convicted a former employee of Twitter after he “took bribes in exchange for accessing, monitoring, and conveying the private information of Twitter users to officials of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and the Saudi Royal family.” That case highlights the country’s ongoing efforts to monitor and suppress social media activity both inside and outside of its borders. Saudi authorities have arrested scores of religious dissidents for their Twitter posts, sentencing some to decades of imprisonment—including Salma al-Shehab, a Saudi student in the United Kingdom (UK) whom a Saudi court sentenced to an astonishing 34 years in prison for implying support for political dissidents on social media. Meanwhile, Forum 18 reported that in October, Russian law enforcement threatened to submit Interpol Red Notices to seek the extradition of two individuals targeted for their religious belief or activity. Throughout the year, USCIRF also received reports that government officials in Uzbekistan continued to pursue or seek the extradition of Muslim individuals who had fled abroad—typically to countries in Europe—to avoid prosecution on various religiously motivated charges, such as illegal possession or distribution of unauthorized religious materials.

While abuser governments perpetrate most religious freedom violations within their own countries, several authoritarian governments often and insidiously seek to extend their religious repression beyond their borders.

the year, USCIRF also received reports that government officials in Uzbekistan continued to pursue or seek the extradition of Muslim individuals who had fled abroad—typically to countries in Europe—to avoid prosecution on various religiously motivated charges, such as illegal possession or distribution of unauthorized religious materials.

Religious Freedom Concerns in Europe

In 2022, religious communities throughout Europe continued to face restrictions on certain religious practices and discrimination on the basis of their faith. As in years past, Muslims and Jews navigated discriminatory policies and societal intolerance that increasingly threatened their way of life, compelling some individuals to emigrate. Christian communities similarly faced rising prejudices.

Some European countries maintained restrictions on wearing religious garb—an issue that impacts Jews, Sikhs, and other religious groups but most blatantly targets Muslim women and encourages societal discrimination against them. In January, the French Senate approved an amendment to ban head coverings in sporting events, although the National Assembly had not moved to enact the ban by the end of the year. In March, the Court of Cassation—France’s highest court—upheld a ban set by the Bar Council in Lille that prohibited the wearing of religious symbols in courtrooms, including head coverings. In May, the town council of the French city of Grenoble voted to permit women to wear a “burkini,” but France’s top administrative court ruled against that decision. In August, a body of the ruling political party in Denmark proposed a ban on hijabs for elementary school girls. In October, the Swiss government introduced a draft law to ban face coverings and fine violators up to approximately $1,100 (1,000 Swiss francs). The European Court of Justice ruled in October that prohibitions on religious symbols in the workplace is not discriminatory if those restrictions are applied equally. Jews also experienced discrimination in manifesting their religion through their clothing; for example, in March, a bus driver in Sweden refused to allow a Jewish man to board because he was wearing an unspecified “Jewish symbol” on his clothes.

European countries continued to debate the issue of ritual slaughter. State regulations requiring the stunning of animals before slaughter, with no religious exemptions, force Jews and Muslims to abandon important religious practices and send them an exclusionary message. In March, Greece dropped an amendment that, if passed, would have allowed ritual slaughter of animals without pre-stunning. In the Belgian region of Brussels-Capital, the Federal Parliament of Belgium rejected a bill that would require pre-stunning of animals. A public petition to the government of the UK calling for a ban on ritual slaughter without pre-stunning ultimately did not garner enough votes for consideration by the British Parliament.

As part of stated efforts to counter “extremism,” governments continued to single out Muslim communities for suspicion and place undue restrictions on mosques and affiliated spaces. In February 2023, just after the reporting period, French President Emmanuel Macron announced that France had conducted nearly 28,000 investigations since 2019 to combat “political Islamism.” As a result, the government temporarily or permanently closed 906 establishments, including mosques, Qur’anic schools, businesses, and civil society organizations, and seized over $57.5 million (54 million euros).

Reports of physical attacks against individuals on the basis of religion persisted throughout the year. For example, in January, individuals assaulted two Orthodox Jews in the UK and in September verbally harassed and physically attacked Jews on public transportation in Germany. In August, a man in France murdered his neighbor, Eyal Haddad, confessing to police that he did so because the victim was Jewish. During another incident in France, police officers physically assaulted two Muslim women in May and attempted to forcibly remove one’s hijab.

The vandalism of places of worship, holy sites, and other places of religious significance remained a threat to religious freedom in Europe throughout the year. Vandals desecrated Jewish cemeteries in Greece, Germany, and Hungary, among other places. On Yom Kippur, an unidentified individual broke a window during religious services at a synagogue in Hanover, Germany; mere weeks later, German authorities found bullet holes at a synagogue in Essen. Additionally, vandals targeted synagogues in other countries, including Spain and Italy, and desecrated Holocaust memorials in Lithuania and Greece. As in previous years, individuals also targeted Muslim cemeteries throughout Europe, including in Germany and Sweden. Unknown individuals threw stones at a mosque in Sweden in September and set fire to a mosque in the Netherlands in August.

Vandalism and restrictive policies also targeted or impacted Christian communities. According to local clergy, arsonists likely set fire to a church in Rautjarvi, Finland, during December Christmas services, while in Paris, France, a suspicious fire seriously damaged a Russian Orthodox Church on Easter Sunday. In addition, three Austrian churches were the targets of vandalism in the span of two weeks. In December, UK authorities arrested a woman for silently praying outside of an abortion clinic and charged her with violating a legal “buffer zone,” which bans protests around abortion clinics in certain UK localities.

Laws Restricting Religious Freedom

In 2022, governments in various parts of the world maintained laws based on religion that may result in violations of international standards regarding freedom of religion or belief. As USCIRF delineated in an issue brief in November, such governments repress religious freedom through laws and policies that coerce compliance with a particular religious interpretation, typically one that aligns with an official or state-favored religion. These sorts of laws can lead to severe violations of freedom of religion or belief and other human rights, including discrimination on the basis of religion against individuals and communities who do not adhere to the state’s interpretation. Targets of such discrimination include religious minorities, dissenters within the majority faith, nonreligious persons, women, and members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and intersex (LGBTQI+) community. USCIRF’s report found that although there is no inevitable contradiction between religious freedom and a country’s adoption of an official or favored religion, most governments within this category also maintained laws or policies on the basis of religion that led to discrimination or repression. Far fewer countries—less than a third—named an official or favored religion and yet maintained no discriminatory laws or policies based on that religion.

Blasphemy laws remained one of the most pervasive and corrosive ways that governments—in a variety of religious, cultural, and political contexts—employed laws in 2022 to enforce a particular interpretation of an official or favored religion or to protect such a religion. Such laws violate freedom of religion or belief, including the right to express a full range of thoughts and beliefs that others might find blasphemous; they also violate freedom of expression and promote intolerance and discrimination against minorities.

As described in their respective chapters, a number of the countries USCIRF recommends for Country of Particular Concern or Special Watch List designation in this report maintain and enforce blasphemy laws, leading to related prosecutions and, in some cases, to societal violence such as mob attacks. However, blasphemy cases continued to emerge in other countries as well. For example, in August, cybersecurity specialists with Bahrain’s Office of the Public Prosecutor questioned and eventually recommended charges against three members of the Tajdeed Society, a Shi’a Muslim cultural organization, for YouTube videos in which they reportedly questioned elements of traditional Islamic jurisprudence. Those individuals subsequently stood trial on blasphemy-related charges beginning in February 2023, after the reporting period. In November, authorities in Mali issued a warrant to arrest a Kamite preacher on charges of blasphemy after he released a video that contained content that many considered insulting to Islam. Officials arrested six of the preacher’s followers for complicity when they refused to tell them where the man was hiding.

As part of stated efforts to counter “extremism,” governments continued to single out Muslim communities for suspicion and place undue restrictions on mosques and affiliated spaces.

Sixteen European countries also maintained blasphemy laws—and in some cases enforced or sought to reinforce them in 2022. For example, in August, an Italian man who cursed in public received a fine of over $200 (200 euros) for violating Article 724 of the Criminal Code, which penalizes blasphemy. In October, a Polish political party, United Poland, submitted a proposal to parliament that would further expand the country’s existing blasphemy law by dropping a requirement that an individual actually take religious offense from another’s actions. These actions stood in marked contrast to efforts elsewhere in Europe in recent years to repeal or nullify such laws, such as Norway (2015), Denmark (2017), Greece (2019), the Republic of Ireland (2020), and Scotland (2021).

In addition to these lingering blasphemy laws in Europe, vague and overbroad hate speech laws also remained a parallel legal challenge to religious freedom. Such laws criminalize speech that does not amount to incitement to violence, denying the integral right of individuals to peacefully and publicly share and express their religious beliefs—including beliefs that others in society may find offensive or controversial. For example, Finnish prosecutors charged MP Päivi Räsänen and Evangelical Lutheran Bishop Juhana Pohjola with hate speech in 2021 for expressing religious beliefs concerning LGBTQ+ issues. Although a court dismissed all charges against them in March 2022, the Finnish prosecutor appealed the ruling in May and the Court of Appeals subsequently delayed a new hearing to August 2023.

USCIRF highlighted several regional and country-specific contexts in which blasphemy cases remained especially concerning in 2022. For example, USCIRF’s October issue update on related laws in Southeast Asia found that blasphemy allegations and convictions continued to represent serious, ongoing religious freedom abuse in Muslim-majority Indonesia and Malaysia, while Brunei’s Shari’a-based Penal Code also enshrined restrictive and punitive blasphemy laws. At the same time, the Buddhist-majority countries of Burma and Thailand maintained their own versions of blasphemy laws as part of their authoritarian arsenals. USCIRF’s December issue update on blasphemy charges in Turkey delineated the ways in which the Turkish government uses Article 216(3) of its Penal Code to restrict freedom of religion or belief and freedom of expression. Its use of blasphemy charges is generally politically motivated and has served as a tool to silence dissenting or simply different voices. USCIRF’s most recent policy update on blasphemy laws in Nigeria, released in October, demonstrates the ways in which the increasing enforcement of these laws as enshrined in criminal and Shari’a codes poses a significant risk to religious freedom for Nigerians—especially religious minorities and those who espouse unpopular or dissenting religious beliefs, worldviews, or interpretations.

Emerging Religious Freedom Concerns in Other Countries

In Belarus, religious freedom conditions continued to trend negatively in 2022 as the government persisted in exerting control over all aspects of society following the country’s fraudulent 2020 election that kept President Alyaksandr Lukashenka in power. Authorities reportedly fined, detained, and sentenced at least 20 Christian religious leaders for perceived political activities and forced several to flee the country. In January, amendments to the Criminal Code took effect, recriminalizing with fines or up to two years’ imprisonment individual activities in unregistered or forcibly dissolved nongovernmental organizations, including religious organizations. In March, police briefly detained four mothers of Belarusian soldiers for attending prayers for peace at the Orthodox Holy Spirit Cathedral in Minsk. In September, the government closed the Roman Catholic Church of Saints Simon and Helena (Red Church) in Minsk—a symbol of political opposition to the Lukashenka regime during the 2020 protests—after a mysterious fire broke out, and officials gave no timetable for the repairs they claimed to be making.

Following Russia’s full-scale invasion of Ukraine in February, Ukrainian authorities increasingly scrutinized the Ukrainian Orthodox Church (UOC)—which is historically and ecclesiastically linked to the Moscow Patriarchate—despite the UOC declaring in May its “full independence and autonomy.” The Security Service of Ukraine (SBU) searched hundreds of UOC churches and other religious facilities and opened criminal proceedings against dozens of UOC clergy for collaborating with Russian authorities, spreading pro-Russian propaganda, or justifying Russia’s invasion of Ukraine. In November, a group of Ukrainian parliamentarians proposed a bill that, if passed into law, would ban the Russian Orthodox Church (ROC) and religious organizations subordinate to the ROC, cancel property contracts with ROC-aligned religious organizations, and regulate the use of the term “Orthodox” by religious groups. In December, President Volodymyr Zelenskyy ordered his Cabinet of Ministers to also submit a bill to parliament that would make it “impossible for religious organizations affiliated with centers of influence in the Russian Federation to operate in Ukraine.” While the Ukrainian parliament had not passed any such legislation banning religious groups by the end of 2022, its potential to still do so remained a serious concern.

In Qatar, the increasingly concerning trend of official discrimination against the country’s small Baha’i community continued. For example, the government has not renewed residency visas for many Baha’is, despite their having lived peacefully in the country for decades, while plans for a new Baha’i cemetery remained in hiatus. In May, the Court of Cassation upheld the 2021 conviction of Remy Rouhani, chair of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha’is of Qatar, on vague charges of financial crimes over his handling of money for that community. In March, the Baha'i International Community raised concerns that Qatar's Baha'i community is "at risk of being eradicated from the country" should these trends persist long term.

Sixteen European countries also maintained blasphemy laws—and in some cases enforced or sought to reinforce them in 2022

The Islamic State continued to pose a threat to freedom of religion or belief, gaining strength, territory, and fighters in several contexts. In addition to threats from the group discussed in the relevant country chapters—including Afghanistan, Pakistan, Syria, and Turkey—affiliates in Mozambique, the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC), and others continued to conduct attacks, harm civilians, and enforce harsh interpretations of Islamic law in their campaigns to establish governance based on their religious beliefs. For example, the Islamic State-affiliated Allied Defense Forces (ADF) reportedly continued to enforce a strict interpretation of Islamic law and commit egregious violations of freedom of religion or belief, including forced prayer, conversion, and marriage.

In addition to violent threats from Islamic State affiliates, armed groups in the DRC directly placed religious communities in their line of fire, including targeting houses of worship. An attack in March by the Cooperative for Development of the Congo (CODECO) on a church compound in Ituri Province killed 18 civilians seeking refuge there. Rwandan-backed armed group M23 also attacked worshippers at an Adventist church in the context of a wider massacre that killed an estimated 270 people in December in Kishishe.

In Ethiopia, armed actors targeted religious infrastructure in the context of the ongoing civil conflict in the Tigray and Oromia regions, impacting worship for several faith communities. In Oromia, Ethiopian security forces attacked practitioners of an indigenous religion conducting a sacred prayer ceremony and abducted, tortured, and executed several spiritual leaders and other worshippers. Instability and impunity for violence in Ethiopia have also aggravated religious tensions in some regions and led to nonstate armed actors attacking houses of worship and religious communities. In April, alleged anti-Muslim extremists attacked the funeral of a Muslim elder in the northern city of Gondar and killed 20 members of that community. In November, an unidentified armed group killed at least 15 worshippers in a drone attack on an Evangelical Christian church in Oromia, following similar attacks on nearby sites earlier that month.

Meanwhile, religious freedom conditions in various parts of South Asia continued to exhibit substantial challenges throughout the year. In Bangladesh, the Armed Police Battalion extorted, harassed, and arbitrarily arrested Rohingya refugees, while government officials imposed new restrictions making it more difficult for these refugees to secure livelihood and for their children to receive education. Elsewhere in the country, perpetrators also reportedly vandalized several Hindu temples in a series of incidents in October and December, echoing deadly anti-Hindu riots that targeted temples and worshippers one year prior. Meanwhile, in July, a High Court in Nepal affirmed the conviction of a pastor for illegal proselytization—despite the dropping of all charges against him one month prior—but revised his sentence from two years' imprisonment to one year and reportedly released him on bail in January 2023, pending appeal.

Combating Antisemitism: Positive Developments

While antisemitism continued to present an alarming resurgence in various parts of the world in 2022, a number of countries in Europe, Latin America, the Middle East, and North Africa launched or continued substantive and ongoing initiatives to combat this trend.

The European Commission published a strategy in 2021 on combating antisemitism and fostering Jewish life in Europe, which—among other items—called for all European Union (EU) member states to develop their own national strategies on combating antisemitism. In 2022, Denmark and Germany joined the list of EU member states to announce their individual strategies, followed by France, Spain, and Sweden in early 2023, shortly after the reporting period. However, Finland was the only additional EU member state to adopt the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance working definition of antisemitism and its examples in 2022. Outside of the EU, Bosnia also newly agreed to adopt the definition, and Croatia followed suit in early 2023, just months after it created and filled the role of Special Advisor to the Prime Minister of Croatia for Holocaust Issues and Combating Antisemitism in September. In another first, Sweden appointed its first Special Investigator responsible for outlining the status of the Jewish community in Sweden and proposing a national strategy on supporting Jewish life.

In April, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) partnered with the Latin American Jewish Congress to organize a workshop for policymakers from Latin America and the Caribbean to promote education to address antisemitism, which 60 policymakers from 14 countries attended. In July, Israel's Holocaust memorial center Yad Vashem launched a collaborative effort with the Organization of American States

Commissioner to Monitor and Combat Anti-Semitism to translate educational materials about the Holocaust into Spanish. Yad Vashem officials also announced a similar agreement that month with Argentina's Ministry of Education to promote Holocaust-related educational and commemorative activities in that country.

In the Arabian Gulf region, some governments moved forward with recent initiatives to promote Jewish life, implement school curricula that positively show Jews as entwined in the national and cultural fabric, and spread Holocaust awareness. In January, the United Arab Emirates hosted its first official International Holocaust Remembrance Day commemoration at the Anwar Gargash Diplomatic Academy in Abu Dhabi, under Ministry of Culture and Education sponsorship. In November, the privately run Crossroads of Civilizations Museum in Dubai held the country's first-ever Kristallnacht commemoration, hosting a Holocaust survivor for the event who also subsequently appeared at a local school to share about her experiences. Bahrain's Hammad Global Center for Peaceful Coexistence also cohosted a Holocaust remembrance event in January in which Israeli President Isaac Herzog and former Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi Yisrael Meir Lau participated.

Indigenous peoples in Latin America have long faced a series of collective and individual threats to the full enjoyment of their religious freedom and related rights . . .

Religious Freedom Concerns for Indigenous Peoples in Latin America

Indigenous peoples in Latin America have long faced a series of collective and individual threats to the full enjoyment of their religious freedom and related rights: lack of recognition of ancestral land ownership, state absence and organized crime, extraction of natural resources by legal and illegal companies, breakdown of the social fabric, and dispossession of land by appropriation. Although not all these areas of concern unambiguously connect to religious freedom from a Western perspective, the holistic nature of most indigenous worldviews in the region means that indigenous groups often indeed perceive and experience them as religious freedom violations. For example, in Nicaragua, the government canceled the legal status of a number of indigenous nongovernmental organizations in March, including the Center for Justice and Human Rights of the Atlantic Coast of Nicaragua, which focuses on environmental development and defending the customs and sacred territories of the country's native communities. Additionally, in July—in a case that illustrates issues that other indigenous communities also face—illegal miners in Peru attacked leaders of the Sua Panki, Tufino, Wawain, and Mamayaque communities in the Department of Amazonas. This sort of harassment and violence forces the displacement of these traditional communities and serves to break their social fabrics.

Religious freedom concerns also impact indigenous individuals across Latin America through several other key issues: conversion, contributions to patronal feasts, construction of places of worship, proselytism and religious education, and renunciation of ancestral practices and expulsion from communal property. Indigenous community leaders themselves have often perpetrated related violations, although organized crime as well as revolutionaries and paramilitary groups have also contributed to these challenges. Researchers at the Observatory of Religious Freedom in Latin America documented 497 such incidents in 2022 in Chile, Mexico, and Colombia; in one such incident, authorities of San Juan Mazatlán in Mexico detained 15 indigenous individuals from six different families from an evangelical Christian community for not contributing to local Catholic festivities.

KEY USCIRF RECOMMENDATIONS IMPLEMENTED

The International Religious Freedom Act of 1998 (IRFA), as amended, mandates USCIRF to make independent policy recommendations to the president, secretary of state, and Congress. The recommendations are based on USCIRF's research on religious freedom conditions abroad and assessment of U.S. policy. In addition, USCIRF's mandate includes tracking the U.S. government's implementation of USCIRF's recommendations and reviewing, to the extent practicable, the effectiveness of such implemented recommendations in advancing religious freedom internationally. While notable U.S. government actions pursuant to USCIRF's recommendations are detailed throughout this report, this section highlights the key USCIRF recommendations implemented during 2022 and early 2023, including several longstanding recommendations. The list, which is not exhaustive, is meant to showcase the effectiveness of U.S. government actions resulting from the implementation of USCIRF's recommendations. Unless otherwise noted, the recommendations highlighted here were included in USCIRF's 2022 Annual Report.

Designating the Worst Violators

- On November 30, 2022, the U.S. Department of State designated 12 countries as "countries of particular concern" (CPCs) under IRFA. USCIRF recommended that the State Department designate 10 of the 12 countries as CPCs. The two countries that USCIRF did not recommend for CPC status but that the State Department designated as such—Cuba and Nicaragua, which USCIRF had recommended for the State Department's Special Watch List (SWL)—experienced severe deteriorations in religious freedom conditions after USCIRF issued its 2022 Annual Report.
- Alongside the CPC designations, the State Department placed four countries on its SWL under IRFA. USCIRF recommended two of these countries—Algeria and the Central African Republic (CAR)—for such placement. CAR was added to the SWL for the first time.
- At the same time, the State Department also designated nine nonstate actors as "entities of particular concern," seven of which USCIRF recommended for such designation.

Filling IRF-Related Appointments

- USCIRF recommended that the Joseph R. Biden administration fill and maintain the position of Special Envoy for North Korean Human Rights Issues. In January 2023, after the reporting period, the Biden administration nominated Julie Turner to serve as Special Envoy with the rank of Ambassador.

Increasing the Use of Targeted Sanctions

- USCIRF has consistently called on the U.S. government to increase the use of human rights related financial and visa authorities to impose asset freezes and/or visa bans on individuals and entities for severe religious freedom violations, citing specific abuses. Over the course of 2022, the U.S. government issued sanctions under the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act (Global Magnitsky Act) and other authorities against individuals and entities specifically for religious freedom abuses. Significant sanctions issued during the year for religious freedom abuses are listed below.
- In September, the U.S. Department of the Treasury sanctioned "judges" serving in Russian-occupied Crimea who imposed harsh sentences on members of religious minority groups for exercising their religious freedoms.
- In September, twice in October, in November, and twice in December, the Treasury Department sanctioned Iranian officials for their brutal crackdown on demonstrators protesting Mahsa Zhina Amini's death in police custody. Prior to her death, Iran's "Morality Police" arrested and tortured Amini for wearing an "improper hijab."
- In October, U.S. Secretary of State Antony J. Blinken announced the imposition of visa restrictions against current and former Taliban officials responsible for violence against women and restrictive policies based on the group's interpretation of religion, such as barring girls from attending secondary school.
- In December, the Treasury Department sanctioned Chinese public security officials responsible for human rights and religious freedom violations in the Tibetan Autonomous Region.
- In December, the Treasury Department sanctioned North Korea's Ministry of State Security Border Guard General Bureau for human rights violations, including forced labor and torture.

Designation of Rohingya Genocide

- In March 2022, the State Department determined that the atrocities committed by the Burmese military, known as the Tatmadaw, against the Rohingya constitute genocide and crimes against humanity, an action that USCIRF had been recommending since 2019. Four days after the determination, the Treasury Department sanctioned Burmese military units, commanders, and arms dealers. USCIRF has highlighted the importance of a genocide determination to the Rohingya community and how to hold perpetrators of mass atrocities accountable.

Raising IRF Issues in Multilateral Engagement

- USCIRF recommended that the Biden administration maintain the United States' leadership role in the International Religious Freedom or Belief Alliance (IRFBA). In 2022, the United States continued to serve as the Secretariat for IRFBA. During the year, IRFBA made multicountry statements on egregious religious freedom violations in Nicaragua and Nigeria, the rights of religious minority groups such as the Baha'i and Ahmadiyya Muslim communities to practice their faith freely, and the incompatibility of blasphemy laws with freedom of religion or belief and freedom of expression.
- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government prioritize freedom of religion or belief in the United States' renewed engagement with the United Nations (UN) human rights system, including at the UN Human Rights Council (UNHRC). In 2022, the United States served the first year of a three-year term as a member of the UNHRC. During the year, the U.S. government cosponsored a resolution on Freedom of Religion or Belief, supported calling an urgent debate about ongoing human rights violations against women and girls in Afghanistan, and supported convening a special session and establishing a fact-finding mission on Iran's human rights violations following Mahsa Zhina Amini's death in police custody. In addition, the U.S. government supported a resolution that removed Iran from the UN Commission on the Status of Women, organized events on protecting ethnic and religious minority groups in Afghanistan and protecting the right to freedom of religion or belief for Tibetan Buddhists, and joined a 47-country joint statement on human rights conditions in Xinjiang, Hong Kong, and Tibet.
- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government collaborate with and encourage multilateral organizations, such as the Organization of American States (OAS), to monitor and investigate religious freedom violations that occur in Nicaragua. In August, the OAS adopted a resolution strongly condemning the harassment of and arbitrary restrictions placed on religious organizations in Nicaragua.
- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government increase engagement with the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) to stem ongoing religious freedom violations and promote accountability in Burma. In May, the U.S. government hosted a U.S.-ASEAN Special Summit and released a joint statement calling for an immediate cessation of violence in Burma. In November, President Biden attended the 10th Annual U.S.-ASEAN Summit in Cambodia and elevated U.S.-ASEAN relations to a Comprehensive Strategic Partnership.

Raising IRF Issues in Bilateral Engagement

- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government urge relevant Algerian government officials to deliver clear and timely responses to registration requests by non-Muslim organizations as required by Ordinance 06-03. In 2022, U.S. government officials, including U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Wendy R. Sherman, raised issues surrounding religious organization registration with Algerian government officials and other relevant stakeholders.
- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government prioritize travel to Turkey for officials at the highest levels of the Office of International Religious Freedom to meet with Turkish counterparts and raise issues related to freedom of religion or belief and antisemitism. In September, U.S. Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom Rashad Hussain traveled to Turkey to meet with Turkish government officials, civil society groups, and religious communities on religious freedom related issues.

- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government, in its engagements with Turkish government officials, press for the reopening of the Theological School of Halki. In 2022, Office of International Religious Freedom staff visited the Theological School of Halki and urged Turkey to allow the seminary to reopen.
- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government conduct a comprehensive review of all U.S. assistance to Egypt and continue to withhold a portion of Foreign Military Financing for specified international religious freedom violations. Congress conditioned up to $300 million of the $1.3 billion annual Foreign Military Financing aid package to Egypt on human rights improvements. In September, the administration chose to withhold \$130 million.
- USCIRF recommended that Congress incorporate religious freedom concerns into its larger oversight of the U.S.-Iraq bilateral relationship through hearings, letters, and congressional delegations. In November, House Veterans Affairs Committee members traveled to Iraq and raised religious freedom issues.
- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government grant a waiver of sanctions in the areas governed by the Autonomous Administration of North and East Syria. In May, the U.S. government issued a general license authorizing wider forms of private economic activity in areas of northeast and northwest Syria outside the control of President Bashar al-Assad's regime.
- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government continue to allocate funding for humanitarian assistance, including for refugees, internally displaced persons, and returnees in CAR. In 2022, the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) maintained its support for CAR, including through health and nutrition assistance as well as water, sanitation, and hygiene assistance; protection programs for CAR's most vulnerable populations; and shelter and settlement support.
- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government provide financial, administrative, and diplomatic support to CAR's Special Criminal Court (SCC), including urging the CAR government to cease all obstructions to such investigations. In 2022, the U.S. government continued to support the SCC, including through statements recognizing the body's accomplishments.

Implementation of Executive Order 13926 - Advancing International Religious Freedom

- USCIRF has called on the Biden administration to continue to implement the executive order on Advancing International Religious Freedom, signed by then President Donald J. Trump in June 2020. The executive order included several of USCIRF's longstanding recommendations related to the prioritization of religious freedom in U.S. foreign policy. This included increasing related foreign assistance and developing an overall strategy for promoting religious freedom abroad and country-specific action plans. In 2022, the Biden administration implemented the executive order in the following ways:
 - The State Department continued to pursue country-specific action plans, again dedicated $50 million to IRF-related programming, and continued to provide training on IRF issues to foreign service officers.

- USAID continued to advance religious freedom within its priorities and programming, including through activities to address the needs of vulnerable religious minority communities in various parts of the world as well as organizational initiatives such as the IRF Sector Council to foster agency-wide coordination and cooperation.

Refugee Resettlement

- USCIRF has consistently recommended that the U.S. government maintain a robust refugee resettlement program and that victims of the most severe religious persecution be prioritized. In September 2022, the Biden administration maintained the annual refugee ceiling at 125,000 for FY 2023.
- USCIRF recommended that Congress reauthorize the Lautenberg Amendment to aid persecuted Iranian religious minorities seeking refugee status in the United States. In March, the Lautenberg Amendment was reauthorized.

Asylum Seekers in Expedited Removal

- USCIRF has repeatedly recommended that successive administrations address the longstanding flaws in the treatment of asylum seekers in expedited removal that USCIRF has identified in reports issued in 2005, 2007, 2013, and 2016.
- In March 2022, the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) and Department of Homeland Security (DHS) issued a new rule that authorizes asylum officers from the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) to consider the asylum applications of individuals subject to expedited removal who assert a fear of persecution or torture and pass the required credible fear screening, as USCIRF had recommended. Prior to the new rule, USCIS asylum officers could only conduct an initial screening to evaluate whether an applicant's fear of persecution or torture was credible. If the asylum officers found the fear credible, then the application would be referred to an immigration judge for consideration.

Advocacy for Religious Prisoners of Conscience

- USCIRF has recommended that U.S. government officials and members of Congress press foreign governments for the release of religious prisoners of conscience (RPOCs). Pursuant to this recommendation, U.S. officials actively engaged on RPOC cases around the world.
- The State Department strongly condemned the Burmese government's arrest and detention of Reverend Hkalam Samson and called for his release. Reverend Samson has been one of Burma's most respected religious leaders and a prominent voice for peace.
- The State Department marked the 33rd birthday of Gedhun Choekyi Nyima, the 11th Panchen Lama, who has been missing since the Chinese government abducted him as a six-year-old child, and urged the Chinese government to account for his whereabouts and wellbeing.

- The State Department condemned the Russian government's imprisonment of Jehovah's Witnesses for holding religious meetings.
- The U.S. Mission in Vietnam advocated for access to religious materials and clergy for persons who were incarcerated.
- Members of Congress advocated for the release of RPOCs, including by adopting RPOCs through the Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission's (TLHRC) Defending Freedoms Project and speeches on the Senate floor.

Enforcement of China-Related Human Rights Legislation

- USCIRF recommended that the U.S. government enforce China-related human rights legislation to ensure that U.S. companies do not contribute to religious freedom violations in China. In June, the Uyghur Forced Labor Prevention Act (UFLPA) went into effect and U.S. Customs and Border Protection began implementation of the law by prohibiting imports from Xinjiang. In August, DHS published its UFLPA entities list identifying foreign companies involved in human rights violations in Xinjiang. Foreign companies appearing on the entities list are presumed to produce products wholly or in part with forced labor, and as such their products are prohibited entry at U.S. ports of entry. In December, the U.S. Department of Commerce added Tianjin Tiandi Weiye Technologies to its entities list for the company's human rights violations in China, including against Uyghurs, Kazakhs, and other members of Muslim minority groups in Xinjiang. As such, the company will be subject to import restrictions.

Congressional Action Promoting Religious Freedom

- USCIRF recommended that Congress highlight international religious freedom issues through legislation, hearings, briefings, and other actions.
- In April, Congress passed and the president signed into law the permanent reauthorization of the Global Magnitsky Act.
- In December, Congress passed and the president signed into law the Burma Act.
- In 2022, Congress held several hearings on international religious freedom issues. Those hearings include a House Foreign Affairs Committee hearing on the Burma crisis one year after the coup, TLHRC hearings on discrimination against Muslims worldwide and the perilous state of religious freedom in Nicaragua, and Congressional Executive Commission on China hearings on China's control of religion through digital authoritarianism, growing constraints on language and ethnic identity in China, and human rights abuses in Tibet.

APPENDIX 1 COMMISSIONER BIOGRAPHIES

Nury Turkel, Chair

REAPPOINTED BY
Hon. Nancy Pelosi (D), then Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, for a term expiring in May 2024. Lawyer, author, human rights advocate, Senior Fellow at the Hudson Institute, and member of the Council on Foreign Relations.

Abraham Cooper, Vice Chair

APPOINTED BY
Hon. Mitch McConnell (R), Senate Minority Leader, for a term expiring in May 2024. Associate Dean and Director of Global Social Action for the Simon Wiesenthal Center, a leading Jewish human rights organization.

David Curry, Commissioner

APPOINTED BY
Hon. Kevin McCarthy (R), then House Minority Leader, for a term expiring in May 2024. President and CEO of Global Christian Relief, an international ministry that advocates on behalf of those who are persecuted for their Christian faith.

Frederick A. Davie, Commissioner

REAPPOINTED BY
Hon. Charles Schumer (D), Senate Majority Leader, for a term expiring in May 2024. Senior Strategic Advisor at the Union Theological Seminary in New York City and Senior Advisor on Racial Equity at Interfaith America.

Sharon Kleinbaum, Commissioner

APPOINTED BY President Joseph R. Biden (D) for a term expiring in May 2023. Spiritual leader of Congregation Beit Simchat Torah in New York City and Commissioner on New York City's Commission on Human Rights.

Mohamed Magid, Commissioner

APPOINTED BY President Joseph R. Biden (D) for a term expiring in May 2024. Executive Religious Director and Imam of All Dulles Area Muslim Society Center, Chairman of International Interfaith Peace Corps, member of the Muslim Jewish Council, Co-President of Religions for Peace, and Co-Founder of the Multi-faith Neighbors Network.

Stephen Schneck, Commissioner

APPOINTED BY
President Joseph R. Biden (D) for a term expiring in May 2024. Political philosopher and retired professor from The Catholic University of America. Catholic advocate for social justice and serves on the governing boards of Catholic Climate Covenant and Catholic Mobilizing Network.

Eric Ueland, Commissioner

APPOINTED BY
Hon. Mitch McConnell (R), Senate Minority Leader, for a term expiring in May 2024. Visiting Fellow at the Heritage Institute with history of service in the United States Congress, the executive branch, and the private sector.

Frank Wolf, Commissioner

APPOINTED BY
Hon. Kevin McCarthy (R), then House Minority Leader, for a term expiring in May 2024. Retired U.S. Member of Congress, Founder and former Co-Chairman of the Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission.

APPENDIX 2 FREEDOM OF RELIGION OR BELIEF VICTIMS LIST

Introduction

The International Religious Freedom Act of 1998 (IRFA), as amended by the Frank R. Wolf International Religious Freedom Act of 2016, requires USCIRF to:

make publicly available, to the extent practicable . . . lists of persons it determines are imprisoned or detained, have disappeared, been placed under house arrest, been tortured, or subjected to forced renunciation of faith for their religious activity or religious freedom advocacy by the government of a foreign country that the Commission recommends for designation as a country of particular concern [CPC] . . . or by a nonstate actor that the Commission recommends for designation as an entity of particular concern [EPC].

USCIRF developed the Freedom of Religion or Belief \(FoRB\) Victims List—an online public database—to implement this provision for countries USCIRF recommends for Country of Particular Concern (CPC) or Special Watch List (SWL) status. The list also includes such victims located in the de facto territories of nonstate actors that USCIRF recommends for Entity of Particular Concern (EPC) status, according to the same criteria.

Due to limited resources, USCIRF is unable to identify and document all victims that meet the statutory requirement to be included on the FoRB Victims List and generally relies on receiving submissions from outside individuals and organizations. As such, the information contained in the database does not reflect country, regional, or global trends. Furthermore, percentages highlighted in this section should not be used for extrapolation purposes nor interpreted as a particular group experiencing greater violations than another or a particular country committing violations at a greater rate than others. To support this project, USCIRF invites those with credible information on victims to submit information using the Victims List Intake Form. Additional information about the FoRB Victims List can be found in USCIRF's FoRB Victims List Factsheet.

Perpetrators

By the end of 2022, the FoRB Victims List included nearly 2,000 individuals targeted by 26 different countries and entities. More than 1,400 victims remain in some form of custody, while more than 300 have been released. The detention status of approximately 200 cases remains unknown, and six individuals are listed as deceased after dying in state custody. The following table provides a breakdown of the data by country.

Perpetrator	Not Released	Released	Died in Custody	Unknown	Total
Algeria	5				5
Azerbaijan	6	3		2	11
Burma	4				4
China	578	29		146	753
Cuba	8	1		2	11
Egypt	2	12		1	15
Eritrea	25	24	1		50
Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham (HTS)				2	2
Houthis	1	1			2
India	44	10	1		55
Indonesia	6			1	7
Iran	167	119	1	7	294
Iraq	2				2
Islamic State in West Africa Province (ISWAP)				1	1
Kazakhstan	11	3		1	15
Malaysia				4	4
Nicaragua	9				9
Nigeria	6			3	9

Perpetrator	Not Released	Released	Died in Custody	Unknown	Total
North Korea	1			8	9
Pakistan	61	21	1		83
Russia	318	50		1	369
Saudi Arabia	38	6			44
Tajikistan	9	3			12
Turkmenistan	6	21			27
Uzbekistan	52	30			82
Vietnam	59	6	2	10	77
Total	1,418	339	6	189	1,952

Based on the information maintained in the database, the following chart reflects the percentage of individuals imprisoned by country. Among the violators, China imprisoned the most FoRB victims, followed by Russia, Iran, Pakistan, Uzbekistan, Vietnam, India, Eritrea, and Saudi Arabia. Victims from all other countries and entities individually constituted one percent or less than one percent of the victims in the database.

VICTIMS BY PERPETRATOR

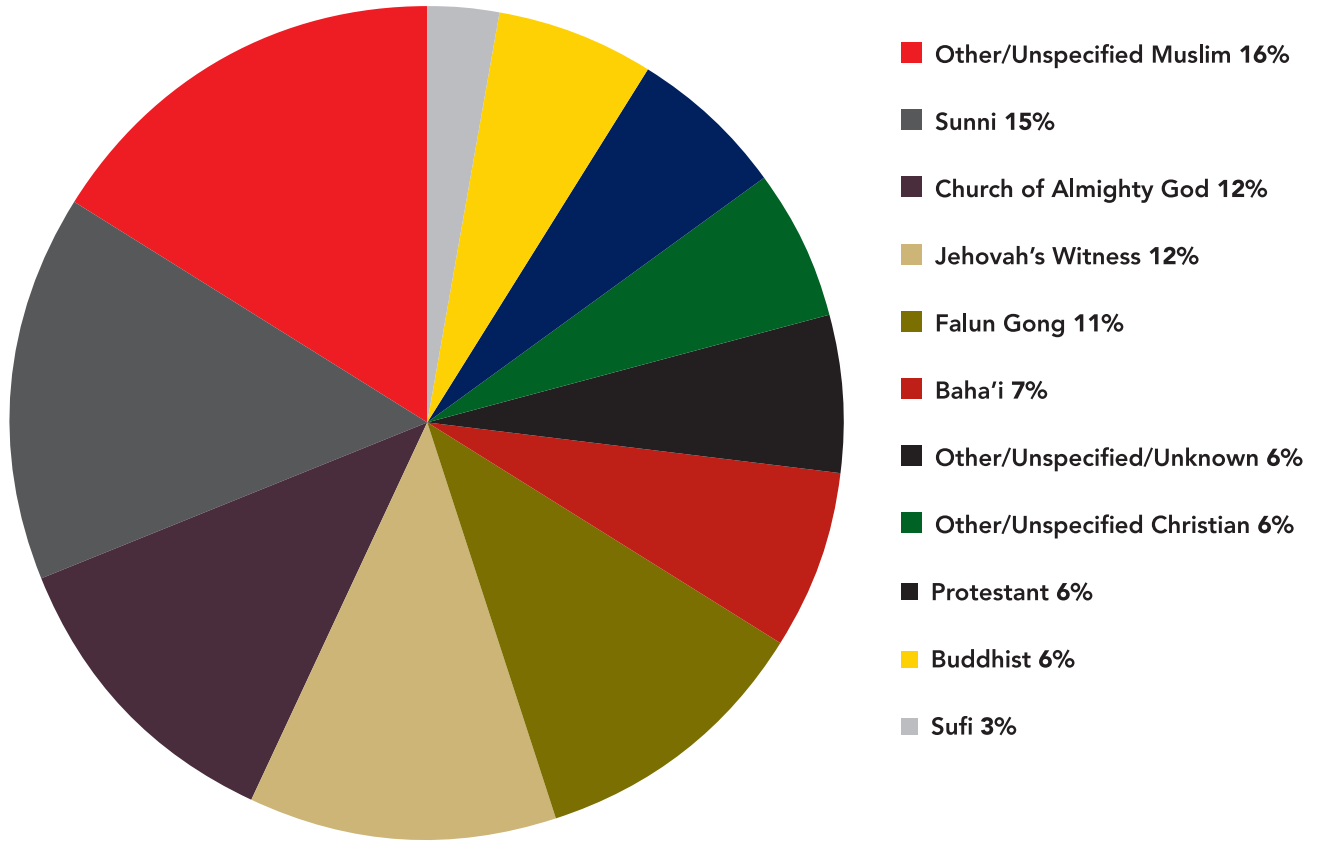

Religions and Beliefs

The FoRB Victims List contains individuals with a wide variety of beliefs and religions, as reflected in the following table.

Religion or Belief	Number of Victims Documented
Adivasi	1
Baha'i	129
Bon	1
Buddhist - Hoa Hao	6
Buddhist - Theravada	3
Buddhist - Tibetan	73
Buddhist - Unspecified/Other	28
Christian - Catholic	40
Christian - Church of Almighty God	236
Christian - Jehovah's Witness	227
Christian - Orthodox	14
Christian - Protestant	113
Christian - Unspecified/Other	62
Duong Van Minh	4
ECKist (Eckankar)	1
Erfan-e Halgheh Practitioner	2
Falun Gong	208
Hindu	11
Humanist	1
Jewish	1
Muslim - Ahmadiyya	22
Muslim - Qur'anist	1
Muslim - Shi'a	37
Muslim - Sufi	61
Muslim - Sunni	300
Muslim - Unspecified/Other	264
Santería	5
Scientologist	1
Shaman	1
Sikh	1
Yarsani	37
Unknown/Unspecified	61
Total	1,952

The following chart provides a percentage for the individuals, based on their religion or belief, maintained in the database.

VICTIMS BY RELIGION OR BELIEF

Nature of Charges

Individuals included on the FoRB Victims List face a range of charges in several different legal contexts. USCIRF created groupings for similar charges to identify how foreign governments and entities justify the incarceration of the individuals included on the FoRB Victims List. USCIRF's categories are not mutually exclusive, and individuals are often included in more than one category based on varying charges brought against them. While USCIRF excludes from the FoRB Victims List individuals known to have committed or promoted violence, many individuals on the list face unsubstantiated accusations of violent crimes by the foreign government.

USCIRF is in the process of identifying charges for more than a quarter of the victims. Dozens of victims are not facing any charges, yet they remain imprisoned or have been subjected to other violations included on the FoRB Victims List that do not involve legal charges, such as enforced disappearance or forced renunciation of faith.

Nature of Charges Categories	Number of Individuals Charged	Percentage of Individuals Charged
Aid & Abetment	14	1%
Apostasy	4	< 1%
Arms Trafficking & Illicit Use of Weapons	32	2%
Assault & Battery	9	< 1%
Banned Organization	473	24%
Blasphemy	100	5%
Breach of Privacy & Disclosure	2	< 1%
Conversion	29	1%
Crimes Involving Minors	4	< 1%
Criminal Premeditation & Conspiracy	26	1%
Cult	309	16%
Defamation	2	< 1%
Drug Trafficking & Illicit Drug Use	9	< 1%
Embezzlement & Fraud	9	< 1%
Environmental Crimes	1	< 1%
Extremism	257	13%
Fabricating & Destroying Evidence	5	< 1%
Filing a False Police Report	3	< 1%
Forgery	7	< 1%
Harboring a Fugitive	5	< 1%
Hate Speech	108	6%
Illegal Assembly	118	6%
Illegal Business Activity	5	< 1%
Illegal Migration & Entry/Exit of Country	6	< 1%

Nature of Charges Categories	Number of Individuals Charged	Percentage of Individuals Charged
Illicit Financing	52	3%
Immorality	9	< 1%
Incitement to Commit Crime & Violence	43	2%
Insulting Public Officials & Institutions	9	< 1%
Leaking State Secrets	4	< 1%
Mercenarism	2	< 1%
Miscellaneous Religious Crimes	14	1%
Murder & Attempted Murder	27	1%
Negligence	1	< 1%
No Charges/Not Applicable	65	3%
Public Disorder	91	5%
Refusing & Absconding Military Service	23	1%
Separatism	28	1%
Spreading Propaganda & False or Misleading Ideas, Information, or Materials	165	8%
Subversion	76	4%
Terrorism	270	14%
Theft & Robbery	3	< 1%
Threat	2	< 1%
Treason & Sedition	197	10%
Unlawful Disobedience	49	3%
Violating Prison Rules	11	1%
Unknown	559	29%

The following chart highlights the top 10 most common types of charges for individuals on the FoRB Victims List.

TOP TEN MOST COMMON CHARGES

APPENDIX 3 HIGHLIGHTS OF USCIRF'S PUBLIC ACTIVITIES IN 2022

In addition to releasing an Annual Report by May 1 of each year, USCIRF produces research and additional information related to international religious freedom throughout the year. This Appendix highlights USCIRF's events and other materials from calendar year 2022. USCIRF's 2022 press releases and statements and op-eds are available on USCIRF's website at www.uscirf.gov. USCIRF's 2022 Tweets can be found here.

Hearings:

- February 2022: Anti-Muslim Policies and Bias in Europe
- March 2022: Women's Roles in Advancing International Religious Freedom
- May 2022: Freedom of Religion or Belief in Syria
- August 2022: Religious Freedom in Afghanistan: One Year since the Taliban Takeover
- September 2022: Religious Freedom, Violence, and U.S. Policy in Nigeria
- October 2022: U.S. Policy and Freedom of Religion or Belief in North Korea
- November 2022: Crackdown on Religious Freedom in Nicaragua
- December 2022: China's Religious Freedom Violations: Domestic Repression and Malign Influence Abroad

Events:

- February 2022: Global Compact on Refugees
- March 2022: The Implications of Russia's Invasion of Ukraine and the State of International Religious Freedom (Congressional Briefing)
- April 2022: 2022 Annual Report: Key Findings and Recommendations
- June 27, 2022: An Unflinching Voice: USCIRF's Impact on International Religious Freedom (Congressional Briefing)
- August 2022: Constitutional Reform and Religious Freedom in Cuba
- September 2022: Assessing Religious Freedom in Egyptian Curriculum Reform
- November 2022: Iranian Government Propaganda against Religious Minorities

Publications:

- January 2022: Religious Freedom in Tajikistan in 2021 (Country Update)
- February 2022: Religious Freedom in Vietnam in 2021 (Country Update)
- March 2022: Religious Freedom in Iraq in 2021 (Country Update)
- March 2022: Religious Freedom in Russia and Regions under Russian Occupation (Backgrounder)
- April 2022: 2022 Annual Report
- May 2022: Overview of Refugees Fleeing Religious Persecution Globally (Factsheet)
- May 2022: Pursuing Justice and Accountability: Next Steps for the Rohingya Community of Burma (Factsheet)
- June 2022: Increasing Religious Freedom Restrictions on Baha'is in Qatar (Factsheet)
- July 2022: Constitutional Reform and Religious Freedom in Cuba (Special Report)
- July 2022: Religious Freedom in Iran in 2022 (Country Update)
- July 2022: Religious Propaganda in Iran (Special Report)
- July 2022: Kimilsungism-Kimjongilism and the Right to Freedom of Religion, Thought, and Conscience in North Korea (Special Report)
- August 2022: Religious Freedom in Pakistan in 2022 (Country Update)
- August 2022: Religious Freedom in Nicaragua in 2022 (Country Update)
- August 2022: Religious Freedom in Afghanistan (Country Update)
- August 2022: Assessing Religious Freedom in Egyptian Curriculum Reform (Special Report)
- September 2022: Uzbekistan: Space for Reform (Country Update)
- September 2022: Violence and Religious Freedom in Nigeria (Policy Update)
- October 2022: Blasphemy and Related Laws in ASEAN Member Countries (Issue Update)
- October 2022: Blasphemy Laws in Nigeria (Policy Update)
- November 2022: Law and Religion in Algeria (Factsheet)
- November 2022: Implications of Laws Promoting State-Favored Religions (Issue Brief)

- November 2022: Religious Freedom Conditions in India (Country Update)
- November 2022: Religious Freedom Conditions in Sri Lanka (Country Update)
- November 2022: Religious Freedom in Syria under Hay'at Tahrir al-Sham \(HTS\) (Factsheet)
- December 2022: Freedom of Religion or Belief \(FoRB\) Victims List (Factsheet)
- December 2022: Blasphemy Charges in Turkey (Issue Update)
- December 2022: Tolerance, Religious Freedom, and Authoritarianism (Special Report)
- December 2022: Religious Freedom in Burma (Policy Update)
- December 2022: Religious Freedom Conditions in Cuba (Country Update)
- December 2022: Kazakhstan's Religion Law Amendments (Issue Update)
- December 2022: Religious Freedom Conditions in Saudi Arabia (Country Update)
- December 2022: State-Controlled Religion and Religious Freedom Violations in China (Factsheet)
- June 2022: Preview of the IRF Summit 2022
- July 2022: Preview of the 2022 International Ministerial Conference on Freedom of Religion or Belief
- July 2022: Conditions for Religious and Nonbelief Communities in Turkey
- July 2022: Religious Freedom Takeaways on the Ground in Nigeria
- July 2022: Deteriorating Religious Freedom Conditions in South Asia
- July 2022: U.S. Policy Advances for International Religious Freedom over the Past Year
- August 2022: Russia's Religious Freedom Violations in Ukraine
- August 2022: The Impact of Malaysia's Dual Legal System on Religious Freedom
- August 2022: Troubling Signs for Religious Freedom in Sri Lanka
- August 2022: The 5th Anniversary of the Rohingya Genocide
- September 2022: The Plight of Christians in China
- September 2022: Deteriorating Religious Freedom Conditions in Nicaragua
- September 2022: Religious Prisoners of Conscience in Kazakhstan
- September 2022: Turkmenistan's Tight Grip on Religious Freedom
- October 2022: The Nexus of Religious Freedom & Women's Rights in Iran
- October 2022: Russia's Persecution of Jehovah's Witnesses
- October 2022: The Legacy of Blasphemy Laws in Southeast Asia
- October 2022: Civil Society's Important Role in Promoting Freedom of Religion or Belief
- November 2022: Recovering from Genocide: The Yazidis' Return to Sinjar
- November 2022: The Persecution of Muslims in Tajikistan
- November 2022: The Suffocating Hold of HTS on Northwest Syria
- November 2022: The Alevi Struggle for Rights in Turkey
- December 2022: Preview of IRF Summit 2023
- December 2022: Reflecting on USCIRF's Visit to Cox's Bazar
- December 2022: Breaking Down the State Department's IRF Designations

Spotlight Podcast Episodes:

- January 2022: Worrying Trends for Religious Freedom in Central and Eastern Africa
- January 2022: Christians in Extreme Danger in Afghanistan
- February 2022: Nicaragua's Assault on Religious Freedom
- February 2022: The Grim Backdrop to the Beijing Olympics
- February 2022: Iraq's Beleaguered Religious Minority Communities
- March 2022: Implications of Russia's Invasion of Ukraine Part 1: "Denazification" Narrative
- March 2022: Implications of Russia's Invasion of Ukraine Part 2: The Religious Regulation Framework
- March 2022: The Status of Religious Freedom for the Baha'i Community
- April 2022: Rohingya Genocide Determination and Accountability
- April 2022: Nontheists Facing Challenges to Freedom of Belief
- April 2022: Persecuted Christians around the World
- April 2022: USCIRF Releases 2022 Annual Report with Recommendations for U.S. Policy
- May 2022: Anti-Conversion Laws and Growing Intolerance in India
- May 2022: Content Moderation Online and Its Impact on Religious Freedom
- May 2022: Treatment of Asylum Seekers in the Expedited Removal Process
- June 2022: Uzbekistan: Gaps in Principles and Practice
- June 2022: Religious Prisoners of Conscience in Iran
- June 2022: Religious Freedom Backslides in Central African Republic

2023 USCIRF RECOMMENDATIONS

■ COUNTRIES OF PARTICULAR CONCERN ■

Afghanistan

India

Pakistan

Turkmenistan

Burma

Iran

Russia

Vietnam

China

Nicaragua

Saudi Arabia

Cuba

Nigeria

Syria

Eritrea

North Korea

Tajikistan

■ SPECIAL WATCH LIST COUNTRIES ■

Algeria

Egypt

Kazakhstan

Turkey

Azerbaijan

Indonesia

Malaysia

Uzbekistan

Central African Republic

Iraq

Sri Lanka

UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

732 North Capitol Street, NW, Suite A714
Washington, DC 20401

Telephone: (202) 523-3240

www.uscirf.gov